LUNG INFLAMMATIONS IN LAMBS. [1962] [10]p.
FASEB manuscript no. S 260-2.
Order from OTS or SLA $1.10 63-19018

Trans. of Veterinariya (USSR) 1962 [v. 39] no. 2, p. 27-30.

DESCRIPTORS: *Lungs, *Inflammation, *Sheep, Heart, Liver, Anatomy.

Comparative autopsies were made on lambs which had died from natural infection and those which were infected experimentally by a bacteria which was found to resemble pleuropneumonia microorganisms. Two cultures were used to inoculate the experimental lambs: first, a broth culture prepared from the organs of lambs which had died from the disease; and, second, a culture grown on Martin-serum broth. The pathoanatomical changes in lambs inoculated with the second culture were identical but less pronounced than the changes effected by the first culture. The changes in animals after experimental infection differed somewhat from the changes in natural infection. The disease is characterized by considerable disintegration of erythrocytes, hemorrhagic inflammation of the lungs, and changes in the heart and liver.

Order from OTS $0.50 63-11647

Trans. of Akademiya Nauk SSSR. Doklady, 1963, v. 149, no. 1, p. 65-67.

DESCRIPTORS: *Venus, *Radio astronomy, *Extraterrestrial radio waves, *Planets, Physical properties, Measurement, Astrophysics, Telescopes, Resolution.

During October-November of 1962 observations were carried out of the radio emission from Venus on 3.02 cm wavelength by means of a large Pulkovo radio telescope with a variable profile antenna. The purpose of these investigations was to evaluate the nature of the distribution of radio brightness, by using high resolving power and high precision of the coordinate measurements with a variable profile antenna. A divergence between the optical and radiomethods cannot be explained by the presence of high radiation belts as in the case with the Jupiter. Radio emission is practically absent at a distance of 1.07 $R_{\odot}$ from the center of the disk of the planet, i.e. the height of the radiation region does not exceed 420 km aboce the cloud cover of Venus. The results of measurements of the effective dimensions of Venus are shown. An attempt to determine the phase variations of radio temperature with displacement of the center of gravity of radio emission led to a negative result. The observations agree best of all with the model of a hot surface and cold atmosphere (Extracted).

ANABIOSIS AND THE GENERAL PROBLEM OF LIFE 2 July 63, 30p. 50 refs. JPRS: 19994.
Order from OTS $1.00 63-31184

Trans. of Zhurnal Obshchei Biologii (USSR) 1963, v. 24, no. 2, p. 81-97.

DESCRIPTORS: *Clinical death, Physiology, *Hibernation, Biology, Metabolism, Regeneration.

Organisms can exist not only in the ordinary state of life, but also in non-vital states. These latter are intermediate states (mesabiosis) between life and anabiosis, which are characterized by the one-side metabolism (only dissimilation), and anabiosis (biosis) which is characterized, in its turn, by the absence of metabolism and by insignificant destructive processes. The limits between the above cited states bear the character of sudden changes. In connection with the recognition of the possibility of non-vital states of organisms certain main principles of modern biology must be made more precised. The possibility of the temporary separation of dissimilation and assimilation together with the conservation of structures in unfunctioning state under anabiosis is principally important. This possibility of disintegration of the complicated phenomenon of life opens new ways for investigation of organisms which must lead to the more profound perception of the connection between assimilation and dissimilation, also of the unity between structure and function in the normal state of life. The method described involves the use of a segment of the capillary tube from an ordinary Panchenkov's ESR apparatus and a special press, which is described in detail. Blood mixed with anticoagulant is drawn up into the capillary tube, which is then placed in the press. The press is placed in the holder of a centrifuge and the tube centrifuged until the packed erythrocytes give a constant volume. The results are read from divisions along the tube. The capillary tube may be filled with blood taken from the finger. The results obtained by use of the capillary tube were verified by analysis of blood taken from a vein utilizing 2 standard hematocrits and 2 capillary tubes. It was found that the difference between the results obtained by the hematocrits and capillary tubes did not exceed the variations between the results of parallel investigations with the 2 standard hematocrits.

DESCRIPTORS: Temperature, *Adaptation (Physiology), Tolerances (Physiology), *Aquatic animals, *Cells (Biology), Marine biology.

A study was made of the heat resistance of digestive and interstitial cells, of the tentacles and intact organisms of four species of hydras: Hydra oligactis, H. vulgaris (ordinary and red forms), and Chlorohydra viridissima. The heat resistance level of the cells, like the heat resistance levels of the tentacles and intact hydras, depends on the ambient temperature in nature and under laboratory conditions. When the hydras are transferred from the warm to the cold the heat resistance of their cells changes, whereby the changes are of a phasic nature: after a rise, found after two hours, a reduction in heat resistance is observed, and then there is again a rise and a second fall, after which a new stable level of heat resistance of the cells is established (on the eighth day). When several species of hydras are kept under the same temperature conditions significant differences are demonstrated between them with respect to the heat resistance of cells, apparently connected with the temperature conditions under which the species live. DESCRIPTORS: *Gastrointestinal system, *Histology, Freezing, Stomach, Intestines, Gelatin, Leukocytes, Biological stains.

Goldmann's staining method was modified to examine large fragments of the walls of the stomach and intestine and the vermiform appendix. The tissues were mounted in gelatin and left for two days. Excess gelatin outside the specimen can be trimmed off before the specimen is cut on the freezing microtone. The gelatin on the sections does not interfere with microscopic examination or microphotography. Parallel hematoxylineosin staining was done of all the appendix and intestinal sections except when van Gieson's iron method and Kampas's silver method were used. Some notable features in the leukocyte distribution development of fatty tissue were revealed. Goldmann's method may also be applied to other hollow organs and to serous sheaths.

DESCRIPTORS: *Autonomic nervous system, *Brain, *Hypothalamus, *Thalamus, Stimulation, Injuries, Heart, *Epinephrine, *Chlorpromazine,

Various regions of the brain were stimulated or injured to study the extent to which various levels of the reticular formation participate in the regulation of vagal tone in unanesthetized animals with species differences in the parasympathetic effects on the heart. Stimulation for 10 to 20 seconds of the hypothalamus and the mesencephalic reticular formation was followed by inhibition of cardiac and motor activity, and respiration. After stimulation of the thalamus, the medical lemniscus, and central gray, there was an increase in heart and respiratory rates and motor excitability. Epinephrine, given after stimulation of the midbrain reticular formation and hypothalamus, tended to intensify the motor reaction and increase excitability but did not affect the post-stimulation reaction to chlorpromazine which inhibited the thresholds, intensity, and duration of motor excitation. The tone of the parasympathetic innervation of the heart increased after stimulation of the midbrain reticular formation, and decreased after stimulation of the thalmic reticular formation. The opposite results were obtained after injury. Analysis showed that autonomic reactions occurred after stimulation because of changes in the vagal tone. The trend of the changes was the same for both cats and rabbits according to the site of stimulation or injury.

DESCRIPTORS: *Nerve cells, Histology, *Ganglia, *Autonomic nervous system, Cats, Morphology.

Studies were made at various seasons and days of the ganglia of the solar plexus, the superior and inferior mesenteric, stellate and superior cervical ganglia of 90 cats. A great diversity of forms in each stage was observed. At first two regions of cytoplasm are formed in the neuron, one differentiated and the other undifferentiated. The nucleus becomes more compact and basophilic, and smaller, or is often elongated. After the nuclear membrane disappears, the chromosomes move into the bright undifferentiated cytoplasm which is surrounded by basophilic differentiated cytoplasm, and then separate. Then the chromosomes extend into long threads, consolidate into separate groups, or in a majority of cases into a single common massive cord. At various moments of separation, the chromosomal figures form and emerge beyond the boundary of the original cell body. The two groups of chromosomes thus formed are then incorporated into the daughter nuclei. Plasmotomy precedes the division of the original cell into two: a small undifferentiated cell (of the neuroblast type) and a large differentiated cell, formed out of the main mass of the original cell.

DESCRIPTORS: Physiology, *Respiratory system, Nervous system, Brain, *Hypoxia, Oxygen consumption, *Hypercapnia, *Sensory mechanisms, Carbon dioxide, Oxygen poisoning.

Experimental data on the laws that govern the structure and functional activities of the respiratory center are presented. Electrical recordings of the activity of the respiratory muscles and nerves of cats and human subjects during hypoxia, hypercapnia and hyperventilation were made. To obtain satisfactory recordings, human subjects were trained to breathe against imposed additional resistance. The recordings indicated that a number of neural mechanisms take part in the modulation of the spontaneous activity of the inspiratory center and in maintaining the normal reciprocal relations between the inspiratory and expiratory centers. Hypocapnia disturbed the reciprocal relations between these centers and the rhythmic alternation of the phases of the respiratory cycle. The author concludes: (1) That the neural mechanisms that maintain the alternation of the respiratory cycle depend upon the CO_2 pressure in the arterial blood. (2) That the connections between the neural mechanisms and the internal environment of the body tissues are important factors in functional organization of the respiratory center.

Due to the compensator the systemic blood pressure may be well stabilized in various effects. The preparation may be successfully used for investigating the intrinsic mechanisms of the cerebral circulation control. It was a number of advantages over the preparation recently described by Dozio ("heart-lung-head"). (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Thyroid gland, *Casein, *Milk, *Amino acids, Fats, *Mammary glands, Iodine, *Diet.

Experiments were performed on 5 lactating goats to determine the effect of thyroid hormone thyroxin and of efferent inervation of the mammary gland on the content of fat and casein in milk and on the amino-acid composition of casein. The goats were fed iodinated casein which resulted in an increased fat content and a decreased casein content. With cessation of iodinated-casein feeding, the normal activity of both glands was restored after a few days. A loss in live weight occurred in those animals fed with iodinated casein. Further experiments revealed that denervated and intact mammary glands secreted milk with identical fat and casein contents before iodinated-casein feeding; during feeding the fat content in milk from both glands increased and that of casein decreased, while the relative proportions of the amino acids in the casein were unaltered. Denervation did not change the effect of iodinated casein on the synthesis of milk fat and casein; the mammary gland may have a well developed compensatory function. Casein content may be increased by influencing the functional activity of the thyroid gland.

DESCRIPTORS: Chemical analysis, *Glutamic acid, Culture media, *Bacteria, Clostridium perfringens, *Glutamine, *Carboxylase.

The determination of l-glutamic acid by the bacterial decarboxylase of Clostridium welchii according to Gale's method can be disturbed by the intervention of a pyruvodecarboxylase in an atmosphere of nitrogen. This action is almost completely inhibited by oxygen and totally by M/5 sodium fluoride, which on the contrary is without action on glutamo-decarboxylase and glutaminase. This selective inhibition makes it possible to maintain, for determinations carried out in complex biological media, the original conditions recommended by Gale and to retain their advantages. The prelimenary results of the study of the flow birefringence of macromolecular RNA (ribonucleic acid) solutions are described. The RNA was isolated from a transplantable mucous carcinoma of the liver. An optical apparatus with a half-shaded condenser was used for studying the flow birefringence of the RNA solutions. The measurements were done in a flow optimenter. The interval between velocity gradients used corresponded to the laminary flow. The relative viscosity of the solutions was measured in a capillary viscosimeter. The concentration of the RNA solutions was determined from their absorption in the ultraviolet region after hydrolysis with 0.5 $HClO_4$. All the investigations were conducted at 21°C. The author found that the flow birefringence of the polymer solutions was due to the optical anisotropy of the macromolecules and was dependent upon the microstructure of the chain (true anisotropy). He concludes that the true anisotropy of the RNA molecule does not differ greatly from the anisotropy of the molecules of flexible polymers.

In studying the effect of polyene compounds on the reversible photochemical reduction reaction of chlorophyll by ascorbic acid, it was found that certain polymethene dyes underwent photosensitized reduction. These observations pointed to the possibility of direct photoreduction of dyes of this class. Conditions were found under which reversible photoreduction of these compounds by ascorbic acid and cysteine and the occurrence of photosensitized reduction of the azo dye methyl red could be observed. The results obtained indicate that the photosensitizing action of such dyes in solution (just as in the case of chlorophyll and its analogs is connected with their capacity for the reversible photoreduction reaction. We examined a few of the problems in using the principles of the information theory in an analysis of the uniformities of biochemical processes. If the problem is examined from an evolutionary point of view, it it becomes obvious that if we encounter in non-living nature, phenomena of exchange of substances, mutual-effect processes, catalysis, etc., then the transfer and coding of information appear phylogenetically only in living systems and constitute the basis for the biological form of movement of matter. Apparently, it is not sufficiently recognized that the exchange of substances and self-creation are basic indices of living matter. (Author)

The purpose of the invention is to provoque artificially the secretion of the active substances of the aleuronic (granules) cells, to hinder the consequent activity of this substance and to extract it in a preservable manner. It was found moreover, that the beforementioned substances are insulated unlike the enzymes, which are thermostabile. According to the invention the bran is left in the presence of water and in absence of attinic rays, of which the granules contained in the aleuronic cells, have caused an initial secretion; the bran mixture and water is then heated at a higher temperature than the one at which the enzymes were destroyed and the liquid part separates from the mixture containing the active substances. THE FOREST PLANT GEOGRAPHY OF CHINA, VOLS. 1-2. 27 June 63, 97p. 20 refs. JPRS: 19892.

Trans. of mono. Chung Kuo Sen Lin Chih Wu Ti Li Hsüeh, Peiping, 1960, 99p.

DESCRIPTORS: *Plants (Botany), *Trees, *China, *Taxonomy, Distribution, *Forestry, Ecology.

The first volume describes the forest plant system of China from the viewpoint of the science of plant taxonomy. In this volume we attempt to clarify the distribution of forest plants in China in relation to all the other places of the world, and to explain the historical and other reasons of the present phenomenon of botanic description. Finally, a description of the general characteristics of the Chinese botanic system was given. The second volume describes the forest plant communities of China from the viewpoint of the science of plant ecology. In this volume, the Chinese botanic system is divided into horizontal and vertical zones according to latitude and elevation. Thus, based upon strong evidence we have gathered, an attempt is made here to reconstruct and surmise the original appearance of the primary forests of each of the zones, and to discuss the changes that occurred. Finally, in consideration of future forestation plans, the condition of growth of many transplanted species was investigated. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Algae, *Evolution, *Biochemistry, Chemical analysis, *Nucleic acids, Desoxyribonucleic acids, Ribonucleic acids, *Nucleotides, *Nitrogen, Phosphorus

Analyses were undertaken in an effort to correlate the characteristic nucleic acid compositions of algae groups with their intra-divisional evolutionary positions. Data are given for many species, particularly those of the Chlorophyta, concerning the content of total nitrogen, phosphorus, and nucleic acids; as well as the relative content of nucleotides and nucleotide combinations in the DNA and RNA.

Under the influence of weak alternating currents, biosynthetic formation of gluconic acid by Aspergillus niger in submerse and aerated cultures showed augmented gluconic acid output. The acceleration of biosynthesis in the first few hours was very great, about 100 to 200 percent over untreated control at optimum amperages. Thenceforward, fermentation rate decreased because of augmented acid output. When AC frequency was changed from 50 to 30, 50,000 and 100,000 cps, fermentation was likewise accelerated, so that electrolytic manifestations did not account for the phenomenon. Electrically treated cultures transferred to new medium did not retain their enhanced enzyme activity. Under AC stimulation, gluconic acid formation was also encouraged at lower pH values. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Antibiotics, Adaptation (Physiology), Viability, *Bacteria, *Grasses, Streptomycins, Aureomycin.

Streptomycin in a concentration from 10 to 0.01 unit/ml has an inhibitory effect on the development of pure cultures of nodule bacteria. The addition of streptomycin in a concentration from 10 units to 0.0001 unit/ml to Kovrovtseva's medium inhibits the growth and development of alfalfa and the physiological activity and virulence of nodule bacteria. In a concentration of 0.0000001 unit/ml streptomycin stimulates the growth and development of nodule bacteria somewhat. The nodule bacteria of alfalfa are less sensitive to biomycin than to streptomycin. Their development as well as plant growth are inhibited by biomycin in concentrations of 10 units and 1 unit/ml. The amount of chlorophyll in purple bacteria Rh. palustris and Chr. minutissimus and of bacterioviridin in green bacteria Chl. thiosulphatophilum and Chl. ethylicum varies in the course of growth. Maximum of these pigments in the cells is noted in the logarithmic phase of growth. In photoautotrophic development purple and green bacteria contain less chlorophills than when grown in media containing acetic, pyruvic, butyric, succinic acid or ethanol. In various species of purple bacteria (Rh. palustris and Chr. minutissimus) the content of bacteriochlorophills is similar media, except propionic acid medium Green Chl. thiosulphatophilum and Chl. ethylicum bacteria grown in a mineral medium likewise contain a similar amount of bacterioviridin. DESCRIPTORS: *Gastritis, Intestine, *Food, Processing, *Gastrointestinal system, Stomach, Physical properties, Physiology.

Two dogs were subjected to experimental gastritis by a mixture of a 0.5% solution of HCl with natural gastric juice. Instead of the usual mixed standard food ration, the rations were ground in a meat grinder or homogenized. The studies showed that the course of the excretion was not greatly different from that under physiological conditions. The linear velocity of food residues along the intestine increased in experimental gastritis. The volume of chyme collected from the same dog on [illegible] was extremely variable. A small portion of chyme was excreted during the first one or two hours after feeding, and the amount subsequently increased irregularly to a maximum and then began to diminish. The character of the changes in volume flow was the same in gastritis as in the normal, but the weight of the one-hour collections varied during the period of reduction. When unground food was given during gastritis the volume rate increased for both dogs, while when ground food was given the volume rate increased in only one dog. Throughout the experiment the linear and volume rates changed independently of each other. It was concluded that the linear velocity depends somewhat on the condition of the stomach. Recovery from gastritis appeared to proceed very slowly.

A case history of a 7 year old girl who died of multiple myelomata is presented. The first signs of the disease appeared in the form of pyletis in 1958. On March 13,1959 she was hospitalized, where she was treated, on the basis of extensive laboratory test, and blood studies for glomerulonephritis. She injured her leg on March 29, 1959. An X-ray revealed multiple myeloma of the bones of knee. X-ray of other bones showed similar patholohy. She died on April 11, 1959. The author points out that it was only as a result of the X-rays taken after the knee injury that a correct diagnosis was made in this case.

The influence of vitamin B_{12} on the phagocytic activity of leukocytes was studied; and the actions of dibasol and vitamin B_{12} on phagocytosis were compared. Injections of vitamin B_{12} helped to increase the phagocytic activity of the leukocytes in rabbits. After the control group was given a physiological solution, the experimental and control animals were immunized with a vaccine containing typhoid, paratyphoid B, and dysentery antigens. Investigation showed that the phagocytic index had risen in all animals; however, the index in the experimental animals was higher than that in the control animals. A month after immunization, the mean phagocytic index was 1.9 for the control animals and 2.1 for the experimental animals. The mean opsonic index was 1.35 in the controls, but 1.6 in the experimental animals; therefore vitamin B_{12} raised the opsonizing capacity of serum in rabbits. Vitamin B_{12} also brought the phagocytic reaction to completion. Experiments on white mice demonstrated that phagocytosis was most pronounced when dibasol and vitamin B_{12} were used together but that vitamin B_{12} alone was somewhat more effective than dibasol alone. The administration of vitamin B_{12} affords increased protection to the organism receiving the vitamin.

DESCRIPTORS: Culture media, *Viruses, *Larynx, *Respiratory system, Chickens, Embryos, *Communicable diseases, Tissues (Biology), Cells (Biology).

The virus of infectious poultry laryngotracheitis (IPL) was cultured on chick embryos and in a fibroblast tissue culture. The virus was isolated and used to infect 12-day-old chick embryo chorioallantoes. A skin-muscle tissue culture of the chick embryo fibroblasts was prepared. The cytopathogenic action of the virus was manifested 4 to 5 days after infection of the tissue culture cells. Strain P caused numerous small nodules and sometimes large focal lesions on the chorioallantois of the infected embryos. The pathological material caused a zone of edema and infections at the sites of application. Seven passages of the virus were made on tissue cultures of the embryo fibroblasts. Beginning with the first passage, the virus on the fourth to fifth day after infection caused cell damage with more pronounced vacuolization than in the controls. The fibroblasts were converted into very fine long cells with enlarged spaces between them. By the seventh to eighth day, the tissue was separated from the glass, while the control had a smooth single layer. With each additional passage, the cytopathogenic effect became more pronounced and constant. When the IPL virus was mixed with normal rabbit serum, cytopathogenic effects occurred in 50% of the cultures, but with hyperimmune serum no effects occurred.

DESCRIPTORS: Anatomy, *Spirochetosis, *Dogs, Pathology, Liver, Intestine, Spleen, Lymphatic system.

Two forms of leptospirosis were detected: the anicteric (uremic) form caused by Leptospira canicola and the icteric form, which sometimes proves fatal. Serious pathological effects resulted in dogs afflicted with leptospirosis icterohaemorrhagica. Anatomical investigations revealed jaundice and multiple hemorrhages, acute venous stasis and edema of the liver and lungs, invagination of the intestine, and hyperplasia of the lymph glands and spleen. The most characteristic histological changes were nephroso-nephritis and disturbance of the trabecular structure of the liver, and inflammation of the kidneys. A disturbance of the calcium metabolism resulted in calcium deposits in the kidneys, heart muscle, and stomach. The presence of metastatic calcification in the icteric form indicated that the pathogenesis of the two forms of leptospirosis is similar.

DESCRIPTORS: *Electrophoresis, Blood proteins, *Lipoproteins, Diseases, *Heat, *Blood circulation, Atherosclerosis.

A fall in the blood α-lipoprotein and a rise in the β-lipoprotein level were observed in conditions of coronary insufficiency. These variations are connected mainly with atherosclerotic coronary cardiosclerosis in the patients. In myocardial infarction patients, the most pronounced fall in the α-lipoprotein level and the most pronounced rise in the β-lipoprotein level were observed during the second week of illness. When anticoagulants were administered, a less pronounced and later (from the 4th week) tendency for the α-lipoprotein level to fall and the β-lipoprotein level to rise was observed. The administration of heparin does not cause monotypical variations in the lipoprotein fraction ratio. In stenocardia patients, almost the same initial values for the plasma lipoproteins were obtained as in myocardial infarction, but no pronounced dynamic fluctuations of the lipoproteinogram were observed. The degree of fluctuations of the lipoproteinogram in the coronary insufficiency patients showed some correspondence with the fluctuations of the proteinogram and the severity of the disease. The functional state of the thyroid gland, as determined from basal metabolism, I^{131} absorption, and protein-bound iodine, was found to be changed in one or the other direction in the majority of patients with diencephalic syndrome. There was no correlation between the clinical manifestation of the disease and the functional state of the thyroid gland, as well as between individual indices determining this state. The nature of the disorder in lipid metabolism during diencephalic syndromes differs with clinical symptoms associated with the predominant lesion of one or the other section of the hypothalamus. Lipid metabolism disturbances in patients with diencephalic syndrome are not directly associated with the change in the functional state of the thyroid gland. The change in lipid metabolism and in the thyroid function of these patients depends on the disorder of central regulating mechanisms. (Author)

Experiments were performed on 50 white rats weighing 120 to 140g. Twenty-five rats with excised inguinal lymph nodes and 25 control animals were inoculated in the femoral muscle with street rabies virus. On the 11th, 12th, and 42nd day after inoculation, blood from both groups was analyzed for its content of virus-neutralizing antibodies. Antibodies were found in the blood of the control animals on the 11th day and the number increased in all the rats examined on the 22nd day, whereas in some animals with excised nodes no antibodies were found until the 22nd day and in others not until the 42nd day. Fourteen of the rats with excised nodes and 13 of the control rats became sick and died, most of them between the 10th and 12th days after inoculation. In all the experimental and control rats rabies was manifested by paralysis in the extremities. Thus, there was no difference in the development of the infectious process in both groups. No significant differences were found between the antibody content of the blood of the clinically healthy animals and that of the sick animals. These data indicate that natural resistance to street rabies virus is not related to the presence or absence of virus-neutralizing antibodies in the blood.

The activity of α-ketoglutarate-alanine transaminase of the blood serum increases in a number of acute diseases of the organs of the abdominal cavity; its highest activity is noted in acute cholecystitis and pancreatitis. The activity of α-ketoglutarate-aspartate transaminase increases only in pancreatitis and in phlegmonous and destructive cholecystitis. A correlation between the increase in α-ketoglutarate-alanine transaminase and the severity of the case was noted only in cholecystitis, but not in other diseases. (Author)

This is a study of the histological pathology in the liver of mice, rabbits and guinea pigs 5 to 133 days after inoculation with Schistosma japonica. The infections were induced by subcutaneous injections of mice with 40 cercaria and of rabbits with 200 cercaria. The livers of the guinea pigs were inoculated with saline extract of the parasite culture or live Schistosoma ova. Round cell infillration of the liver was observed one week after inoculation of the mice. These infiltrated areas developed into focal or coagulation necrosis. Pathological changes in the liver cells included nuclear vacualization, mitosis and cellular fatty degeneration. Phlebitis and thrombosis of the portal vein was usually present. The changes in the biliary system were hypertrophy of the epithelial layers, with eosinophilic granules in the lumen. Abscesses formed at the sites of the egg deposits. These developed into fibrous tubercles. The intensity of these lesions was in direct proportion to the number of eggs in the inoculation. There were 2 distinct types of fibers or radiating rays in these abscesses. One type was composed of eosinophilic rays surrounding ova containing the embryo. The other type was found of round cells adjacent to the eosinophilic rays. These changes usually took place in mice about 79 days after infestation.

Deterioration of the functional capacity of the cardiovascular system is of reflex origin in acute pancreatitis, as shown by a drop in arterial and venous pressures, slowing of the rate of blood flow, and the appearance of pathological shifts in the EKG. These changes, functional in nature, are indicative of decreased vascular tone and lowered myocardial function. The therapeutic measures should include drugs that stimulate vascular tone and the myocardium. Normalization of the EKG is aided by a paraneural novocain block, which apparently relieves the overstimulated state of the nervous system and receptors in the focus of the disease. Dynamic EKG investigations are helpful in making an early differential diagnosis between myocardial infarct and acute pancreatitis. When the hemodynamic indices and EKG shifts are abnormal, the patient should be kept in the hospital even when the clinical symptoms of acute pancreatitis have disappeared. (Author)

Karyometry together with morphological, laboratory, and general clinical investigation of liver tap matter may facilitate the differential diagnostics of a number of diseases of the organs of the abdominal cavity. The karyometric curve in cancer of the stomach and of the pancreas without metastases to the liver is commonly high-peaked and has a tendency to shift to the right. Primary localization of the cancer in the liver and the appearance of metastases in it alter the nature of the karyogram: the high-peak disappears and the curve becomes longer on the right side of the karyogram. In patients with ulcer of the stomach and duodenum and those with inflammatory processes in the gall bladder the karyogram is situated in the left portion and has a single high peak. Added complications (hemorrhage or a suppurative process in the gall bladder) are characterized by disappearance of the high-peak, distinct enlargement of the nuclei, and a shift of the curve to the right. The author concludes that if done correctly in cases without contraindications needle liver biopsy should be a valuable diagnostic tool in clinics and large hospitals.

In white rats which have been under anesthesia there is an increase in the degree of dispersion of the nuclear and cytoplasmic contents of many of the cells in the cerebral cortex. Under conditions of excitation, the opposite picture is observed: the nuclear contents are aggregated into larger clumps; the membrane nucleoproteins are increased and often appear in the form of large granules situated along the nuclear membrane, either on its interior or exterior surface. The ctyoplasm of the drainage glia contains large numbers of inclusions. Chronic alcoholic intoxication is associated with the following changes in many of the neurons of the cerebral cortex: dilatation of the canaliculi and vesicles of the endoplasmic reticulum; increase in Palade granules; with deposition of these granules on the walls of the canaliculi and vesicles of the endoplasmic reticulum and in the spaces between. These changes correspond to the condition which has been described in the literature under the name of cloudy swelling. Along with these cells, there are also many neurons which have progressed to the stage of complete sclerosis, accompanied by disintegration of the nucleus and dilatation or destruction of the synaptic structures and conducting systems. These changes point to the presence of local edema. (Author)

Sixty-eight typhoid patients were treated to determine the effectiveness of various treatments on phagocytosis. In most patients, a favorable course of convalescence progressed. Phagocytosis of the typhoid bacilli was found to be about twice as intense as that of the Shigella sonnei. A second examination showed a decrease in phagocytosis of Sonne's bacilli to normal levels and a marked increase regarding typhoid microbes in patients whose convalescence was favorable. The highest indices and most rapid increase were noted in cases of moderate severity, the lowest in severe cases, thus testifying to the varying ability of the body to mobilize its defensive forces. The increase in phagocytic activity in patients with recurrences, complications, or prolonged subfebrile conditions was wavelike: prior to a complication the index tended to decrease; afterwards it increased slowly but steadily. Therefore, a decrease in intensity at the height of the disease can be regarded as an unfavorable sign. The highest indices during the disease and convalescence were noted in patients treated symptomatically. The indices were lower with antibiotics and lowest when antibiotics together with prednisone were given. These results indicate that antibiotics inhibit phogocytosis when used alone and to a greater extent when combined with prednisone. The author concludes that comprehensive therapy is the most effective treatment of typhoid fever patients.

COMPARATIVE DATA OF ELECTROENCEPHALOGRAPHY IN CHILDREN OPERATED FOR CONGENITAL HEART DISEASE. [1963] [7]p. 3 refs. FASEB manuscript no. S 292-2.

DESCRIPTORS: *Electroencephalography, Children, *Anomalies, *Heart, *Surgery.

In children with cyanotic heart disease preoperative electroencephalogram (E.E.G.) shows low voltage slow potentials indicating chronic cerebral hypoxia. No prominent changes can be demonstrated in children with non cyanotic heart disease particularly in younger age groups (3-5 years). In adolescents with complicated noncyanotic heart disease, the preoperative bioelectrical activity of the cortex is reduced. Postoperative E.E.G. shows increased amplitude of the waves, better organization of the rhythms and in a number of cases increased frequency. These data are indicative of the efficacy of surgical intervention. The improvement of hemodynamics is reflected in the functional state of the cortex. Uncomplicated operations carried out with the help of an artificial circulation machine or of hypothermia were not associated with any noticeable voltage reduction or deceleration of the cortical rhythms. THE EFFECT OF IMPROVED NUTRITION IN THE STIMULATION OF THE DEVELOPMENT PROCESS IN EARLY RABBIT EMBRYOS. [1962] [32]p. 22 refs. FASEB manuscript no. S 161-2.

Trans. of Akademiya Nauk SSSR. Izvestiya. Seriya Biologicheskaya, 1962 [v. 27] no. 2, p. 260-270.

DESCRIPTORS: *Nutrition, *Rabbits, *Embryos, Stimulation, Growth, Morphology.

Female rabbits were fed diets high in protein and vitamins to stimulate their metabolic processes in order to alter early embryonic development. The developmental level of individual embryos was evaluated numerically. The more differentiated portions (anterior and middle) of the experimental group were longer than those of the control group, while the less differentiated portion (posterior) was longer in the control group. The length of the first 2 portions is directly related while that of the last portion is indirectly related to the developmental stage. A definite change occurred in the relationships of the parts of 9-day embryos with the experimental diet. The process of segmentation proceeded faster than growth or elongation. Improved nutrition accelerates embryonic development and also increases the degree of variability. The ineffectiveness of nutrition in some rabbits was attributed to heredity. There is no direct relationship between growth and differentiation; the cellular material is a factor in this process. Most of the large embryos were relatively narrow, and the small ones were relatively broad.

DESCRIPTORS: *Hernia, *Diaphragm, *Infants, Gynecology, Anoxia, Growth, Anomalies.

The clinical signs of congenital diaphragmatic hernia are asphyxia, a muddy blue color of the skin, absence of crying in the presence of breathing and good cardiac activity, and marked deterioration of the child's general condition after artificial respiration. Postmortem examinations were made of two infants who had signs of diaphragmatic hernia. The pathological diagnosis of one infant was asphyxia resulting from a congenital developmental defect of the internal organs; congenital right diaphragmatic hernia, displacement of the small intestine and the accessory lobe of the liver through an opening in the right cupola of the diaphragm into the right pleural cavity; and maldevelopment of the right eyeball. Examination of the other infant revealed asphyxia, developmental defects of the internal organs; congenital left diaphragmatic hernia; displacement of the small intestine and spleen through the opening in the left cupola of the diaphragm into the left pleural cavity; and malposition of the heart, liver, stomach and cecum. The treatment of diaphragmatic hernia is operative, but surgical treatment is impossible for aplasia. These operations are not done on the newborn because with large defects the infants soon die, and with small defects they may survive without operation.

DESCRIPTORS: *Anoxia, *Analgesics and antipyretics, *Narcotics, *Hypnotics and sedatives, Resistance, *Sensitivity, Toxicity.

Anoxia was induced using a mixture of nitrogen and oxygen; sodium amytal, urethane, and chloralose were injected intraperitioneally. The excitability of the pain reflex was recorded. The unanesthetized rabbits survived respiration of a gas mixture containing 13.4% oxygen; the anesthetized animals, as a rule, died after exposure to anoxia for periods ranging from 25 minutes to 4.5 hours. The injection of sodium amytal into rabbits in anoxia caused a fall in blood pressure and vascular tone, and respiratory arrest. Urethane and chloralose caused a rise in blood pressure and increased respiration. During anoxia the excitability of the animals increased: the threshold of excitation of the pain reflex lowered and a violent reaction to threshold stimulation developed. A paradoxical response to stimulation was characteristic of the flexor and vasomotor components of the pain reaction. These facts about the pain reflex show the development of a marked inhibition during prolonged anoxia. Anoxia and narcotics act as synergists on the body, causing general depression.

DESCRIPTORS: *Neoplasms, *Cancer, Etiology, *Carcinogenitic agents, *Cells (Biology), Adaptation (Physiology), Growth, *Tissues (Biology).

By utilization of established data concerning the selection of modified cell variants, the author attempts to analyze the various stages of carcinogenesis and the nature of the precancerous processes. His own and other research findings were used to formulate a working hypothesis for further research. These are: (1) Tissue during carcinogenesis constitute a distinctive pathological process, differing from ordinary reactive physiological proliferation. (2) The characteristic biological feature of cell populations exposed to carcinogenic substances in the early stages is decreased reaction to stimuli inducing proliferation. (3) This suppression of reparative proliferation may lead to selection and the accumulation of cells with modified reactivity in the tissue, thereby forming a precancerous focus. (4) The reactivity of precancerous foci in relation to proliferative stimuli is most commonly increased. (5) The cells of precancerous foci are not identical with truly malignant cells. (6) The appearance of precancerous foci is only the first step in the progressive changes in reactivity of cell populations, leading ultimately to the appearance of autonomously proliferating cell populations, an autonomous malignant tumor.

EXCRETION OF 17-KETOSTEROIDS IN URINE AS A BASIS FOR FUNCTIONAL ASSESSMENT OF THE ADRENAL CORTEX IN HYPERTENSIVE VASCULAR DISEASE. [1962] [25]p. 21 refs. FASEB manuscript no. S 253-2.

DESCRIPTORS: Excretion, *Steroids, *Urine, Physiology, *Adrenal cortex, *Hypertension, Cardiovascular system, Ketones.

This is an attempt to elucidate the role of the adrenal cortex in the genesis of hypertension. Tabulations to ascertain relationships between excretion of the 17-ketosteroids in the urine and (1) age of patient, (2) sex (3) stage of the disease, (4) duration of disease, and (5) arterial pressures of patients were made on 100 hypertensive patients. Analysis of the condition of patients showing the largest deviations from the average 17-ketosteroid excretion gave no indication of any factors on which the level of excretion might depend. The excretion of the 17-ketosteroids was not decreased in patients with various liver diseases. No relationship was noted between the 17-ketosteroid level and the erythrocyte sedimentation rate, the blood prothrombin level, hematuria and protienuria. These tabulations showed that the function of the adrenal cortex is weakened in hypertensive vascular disease. The author, therefore, concludes that it cannot be a factor in genesis of this disease. He suggests that the morphological and functional changes found in the adrenal cortex of hypertensive patients are not the cause of the hypertension but a consequence of it.

THE PRODUCTION OF A PURE AVITAMINOSIS-D IN RATS. [1962] [7]p. 2 refs. FASEB manuscript no. S 106-2.
Order from OTS or SLA $1.10 63-15989

Trans. of Voprosy Pitaniya (USSR) 1962, v. 21, no. 4, p. 71-74.

DESCRIPTORS: *Deficiency diseases, *Vitamin D, *Diet, Phosphatases.

Avitaminosis-D was developed in rats in about one month on a balanced diet lacking only in vitamin D. This deficiency caused growth to be retarded or to cease. Ration Ia consisted of 20g casein heated for 15 to 16 hours at 100°, 60g corn starch, 10g brewers' yeast, 4g Osborne-Mendel salt mixture (+$CuSO_4$), 1g NaCl, and 5g lard. Rations Ib and Ic consisted of 15g casein, 73g corn starch, 8g dried brewers' yeast, and 4g Osborne-Mendel salt mixture (+$CuSO_4$). The casein in Ib was heated and that in Ic was extracted twice with alcohol for 12 hours. Ration 2 consisted of 90g wheat (72% extraction) flour, 5g dried brewers' yeast, 4g Osborne-Mendel salt mixture (+$CuSO_4$), and 1g NaCl. All the rats received carotene. Some rats in each experiment received vitamin D_2. With ration Ia no difference was observed between the rats receiving and not receiving vitamin D. With ration Ib, in the rats given vitamin D the ash content of the bones was slightly higher but the gain in weight was smaller. With ration Ic the gain in weight was slightly higher, but there was no increase in ash content or decrease in the phosphatase. A balanced diet with normal salt content and casein as the source of protein did not produce obvious signs of vitamin D deficiency. With ration 2 the rats given vitamin D had a slightly higher ash content of the bones, a lower phosphatase level in the blood, and a more marked increase in weight. Ration 2, which was deprived of its rachitogenic properties, made the signs of "pure" avitaminosis-D more noticeable

Order from OTS or SLA $1.60 62-23490

Trans. of Voprosy Onkologii (USSR) 1955, v. 1, no. 5, p. 14-20.

DESCRIPTORS: *Cancer, Mice, *Mammary glands, *Immunity, Nucleoproteins, Methanols, Antigens.

Mice were immunized at the age of 5 to 7 weeks with preparations obtained from both primary and metastasized tumors in the mammary glands of line A mice. The following preparations were used: (1) a formalinized nucleoproteid fraction obtained from tumorous tissue by alkaline extraction, (2) a formalinized methanol precipitate from tumorous tissue, and (3) formalinized 10% suspension of the tumor. A total of 2561 mice were used. A nucleoproteid fraction and suspension from normal organs from black mice which did not contain cancer virus of the mammary gland were used as the control antigen. Cancerogenesis was not influenced by immunization of line A mice with antigens void of the virus or with tissue containing the non-concentrated virus. When mice were immunized with a nucleoproteid fraction from the tumors of mammary glands which contained cancer virus in a high concentration, the appearance of tumors in the 6th month was noted in 3% of the mice, both in the experimental and control groups. In the 7th month, the frequency of appearance of tumors in the experimental groups was lower than that in the control group by 11%. By the 8th and 9th months, the difference was 22%, after which the difference decreased. Immunization with methanol precipitate retarded tumor appearance. Immunization with non-formalinized methanol precipitate increased the frequency of tumor appearance.

In combination with thiazides, the effect on high blood pressure is definitely more potent than that of reserpine + thiazide, but somewhat weaker than that of guanethidine + thiazide. As to side-effects, aside from a sedation, usually temporary, 2 instances of febrile reactions without other evidence of disease and three times transient psychotic reactions were observed.

It is shown that nicotine influences circulation indirectly by the stimulation of nerve structures. Probably this involves post-ganglionic sympathetic nerve fibers, adrenergic ones with a constrictive effect as well as cholinergic ones with a dilating effect. The threshold dose which just produces the local vessel reactions is higher than that which already produces changes in the blood pressure and heart frequency with an intravenous infusion. Local vascular effects of nicotine in the skin and skeletal muscle therefore probably play only a slight role in circulatory changes in the case of low intravenous doses of nicotine or in the case of the inhalation of cigarette smoke. The characteristics of the distribution of aminazine in segments of the central nervous system of different laboratory animals were studied and compared with the distribution found in rats in prior research. (Primenenie Radioaklivnyjkh Isotopov . Klinicheskikh i Eksperimental'nykh Issledovaniyakh, Moscow, 1958; available in translation from OTS as 60-51178). Rabbits, mice and dogs were injected with aminazine labeled with radioactive sulfur (S^{35}). The animals were killed at varying intervals following the injections. The radioactivity of fresh tissues of all the organs and segments of the central nervous system was determined. The distribution of aminazine in dogs and rabbits was similiar to that found in rats. Generally the distribution of aminazine was found to be similiar in dogs, rabbits, and white mice. In dogs, the accumulation in the cerebral cortex is greater than in other sections of the brain and spinal cord. In rabbits and rats, there was no difference in the absorption of the drug by the cerebral cortex and other parts of the central nervous system. The tests on dogs, rabbits, and rats indicate that aminazine is distributed with unusual selectivity in the organs of these animals.

DESCRIPTORS: Physiology, *Liver, *Nervous system, *Poisoning, *Carbon compounds, *Sulfides, Toxicity, Industrial medicine.

Workers exposed to carbon disulfide frequently experience disorders of the gastrointestinal tract as well as changes in the nervous system. Functional changes in the liver (distinct lowering of the antitoxic, carbohydrate, and protein functions) usually appear early in the development of chronic carbon disulfide poisoning. The patients examined were found to have low arterial pressure, a decrease in the erythrocyte count, a reduction in hemoglobin concentration, an increase in the eosinophil count, and a slowing of the erythrocyte sedimentation rate. Besides various technical and hygienic measures designed to achieve better working conditions, it is essential to improve the quality of the preliminary and periodic medical examinations, taking into account functional impairment of the liver and several other changes noted in the clinical examinations. Those responsible for organizing the feeding of workers in synthetic fiber factories should be aware of the possibility of gastrointestinal disorders and functional impairment of the liver arising in persons exposed to carbon disulfide. The data presented relate to a curare-like substance known as Mi-301, Reorganin, or Relaxil CT which is a glyceryl-guiacol ether. The drug was given to both animal and human subjects. The human subjects studied consisted of 46 healthy subjects and patients aged 14 to 65 years. They were given 1 to 8g of drug intravenously, and observed from 30 minutes to 5 hour. Paralysis of voluntary movements began 4 to 6 minutes after the injection and continued for 20 to 30 minutes. The respiration and autonomic nervous system remained unaffected during the curare-like effect. Secretions in the tracheobronchial system was not increased. The blood pressure dropped 10-15 mm Hg and the pulse was accelerated. Electrocardiographs were unchanged. Doeses of 4 to 5g produced a rather marked relaxation of the abdominal musculature. In human subjects who had been given doses of 1 to 13g, the blood cholinesterase was unchanged an hour after administration. The drug was used on 115 surgical patients as an anesthetic in conjunction with several different narcotics and anesthetics, including barbituates and intratracheal anesthesia. Relaxil G when given intravenously was found to be a moderately effective narcotic and analgesic which intensifies the action of other narcotics. It acts on the central neurons of the midbrain, bulbospinal system. It is recommended for general anesthesia and as a supplement to local anesthesia, particularly for patients in poor condition.

The authors reported on their recent experimental results on atherosclerotic patients fed a fat diet. They used diets producing a serum lipid-decreasing effect containing a mixture of lard and sunflower or safflower oils and ascertained that the essential fatty acids exerted an optimal effect when the ratio of essential fatty acids to tocopherol (in g./mg.) had a value of approximately 2.2. This content can be reached if one adds to lard 25% of natural sunflower oil, whereas in the case of safflower oil tocopherol must be added. In the 5 experimental groups described, the fat mixture containing 13 g. essential linoleic acid and 5.75 mg. α-tocopherol gave the greatest effect. (Author)

The morphological changes of the internal organs and brain of white rats following administration of increasing doses of aminazine were studied. The mininum dose of the drug which produced adynamia in rats was considered to be the minimum therapeutic dose. Animals of approximately the same age and weight were selected for the study. The drug was administered in 24 rats which were divided into groups according to the amount of drug administered. Six rats were used as controls. The amount of drug given these groups ranged from a therapeutic dose to a dose 22.2 times the therapeutic dose. The animals that did not die of aminazine poisoning were killed by severing their heads with scissors. Prolonged administration of therapeutic and double therapeutic doses of aminazine did not cause any changes in the internal organs and brains of rats. Fatty degeneration of the liver was present 20 to 30 days after 3 and 4 fold therapeutic doses. These doses produced no changes in the brain. Degenerative changes in the brain tissue were not found until the dosage equalled 5 1/2 times the therapeutic dose. The cells of the cerebral cortex of the animals that were killed possessed the staining characteristics indicative of cerebral hypoxia. As there was no hypoxia found in the animals who died of aminazine poisoning, the author concluded that aminazine does not cause any hypoxial changes in the cerebral cortex.

DESCRIPTORS: Drugs, *Atropine, *Electrocardiography, Diagnosis.

The phase of short-term increase in vagus nerve tone preceding the negative vagotropic effect of atropine on the heart can be manifested on electrocardiograms by such complex disturbances as atrioventricular rhythm, dissociation by interference, and wandering pacemaker, as well as by deceleration of sinus rhythm and lengthening of atrioventricular conductivity. The above disturbances of rhythm are frequently observed after administration of atropine to young people with functional disturbances of the nervous system and increased vagus nerve tone, without symptoms of organic cardiac pathology. The frequent appearance under the influence of atropine of dissociation by interference and atrioventricular rhythm in non-rheumatic diseases and sometimes in healthy individuals lowers the diagnostic value of these cardiac reactions to the given alkaloid during the active phase of rheumatic disease. Ismelin guanethidine is a highly effective hypotensive agent, producing a good therapeutic effect in essential and renal hypertension. An improvement sets in even in cases where other agents have proved ineffective. Treatment should be started with small doses (10-20 mg per day), and in the absence of positive results the dose can be gradually increased to 50-75 mg after 3-4 days. In cases of stable high arterial pressure, a prolonged course of ismelin treatment is indicated. Ismelin can be used for treatment under both hospital and polyclinic conditions. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Chlorpromazine, *Psychoses, Cerebral cortex, Central nervous system, Inhibition, Conditioned reflex, Plethysmography, Reaction (Psychology).

The manifestation of the depressing effect of aminazine on the central nervous system depends on the functional state of the cortex and subcortex. In some schizophrenics with depressive symptoms aminazine produces inhibition of conditioned reflex activity, which occurs more rapidly and is more pronounced than the depression of the unconditioned reflexes. This makes one think about the initial effect of aminazine on cortical cells. The dynamics of depth of a blocking effect of aminazine developed by the plethysmographic method can be used for determining the characteristics of the functional state of more important sections of the central nervous system of a patient. These data can be used as the basis for individualization of the neuroplegic therapy and use of additional therapeutic methods The experimental data indicating a disturbance in respiration with a considerable depression of the action of aminazine on the subcortex, which is already inhibited pathologically, require caution in the selection of its doses and even its usage in these instances. Nineteen patients with multiple sclerosis were treated up to 10 months with tolbutamide, first as bed patients and then ambulatory. During this long-term treatment relapses were observed in four patients, after an initial improvement in neurological symptomatology. In none of the other cases could a change in the course of the disease be demonstrated. A relationship between a disturbance in carbohydrate metabolism, the course of the disease, and the use of tolbutamide was not observed.

DESCRIPTORS: *Hematology, Diseases, *Lungs, *Drugs, Toxicity, *Vasoactive agents, Blood circulation, Toxins and antitoxins.

Patients with chronic nonspecific lung diseases suffer impairment of myocardial contractility in the early stages of the diseases. Such impairment becomes particularly pronounced when it is associated with cardiopulmonary failure. Bacillus Calmette-Guérin (BCG) reactions provide indirect evidence of developing hypertension of the lesser circulation. Many drugs act on the smooth musculature of the bronchi and pressure in the pulmonary artery in scissors-like fashion. Some of them with broncholytic activity (epinephrine, atropine, ephedrine) also elevate pressure in the pulmonary artery at the same time. Other (acetylcholine) provoke a bronchial spasm and indirectly lower pressure in the pulmonary artery. Euphylline alone produces both a broncholytic and a vasodilating effect on the lesser circulation vessels. Chlorazicin should be included with the drugs that safely lower pressure in the pulmonary artery. Morphine and hexonium lower only elevated pressure but raise normal or low pressure. Patients with chronic nonspecific lung diseases have noticeably low venous tone. The administration of atropine, ephedrine, or euphylline does not affect venous tone. (Author)

The temperature reactions of 200 psychotic patients receiving aminazine therapy were observed and tabulated. The drug was given orally twice a day to 30 patients, intramuscularly twice a day to 90 patients. One intramuscular injection and one oral administration were given to 80 patients. Body temperatures were recorded 2 to 6 times a day. A stable elevation of temperature coincided with the intramuscular injections of 300 mg or more of the drug, accompanied by morbid infiltrations at the injection site. All of the 170 patients receiving aminazine intramuscularly had an elevation of temperature following the injections. In the 30 patients who received the drug orally temperature elevation occurred only 1 to 3 times in 5 patients. Eight patients were transferred from intramuscular to intravenous injections. Their temperatures dropped from 38 or more to normal in 2 or 3 days. When these patients were returned to intramuscular injections, their temperatures become elevated. A tabulation showing the relationship of temperature reactions and changes in the psychic state of 116 schizophrenics indicated that the therapeutic effect of aminazine therapy was greatest with high diurnal temperature elevation. The increased temperature was considered to be caused by tissue reactions at the site of the injections, and not a reaction to the drug.

DESCRIPTORS: *Blood, *Chlorpromazine, Therapy, *Psychoses, Drugs, Leukocytes, Erythrocytes, *Body temperature, Tranquilizing agents, CNS depressants.

The changes in the blood of 30 schizophrenic patients receiving aminazine (chlorpromazine) were studied. One half the patients received the drug intramuscularly. The other half were given tablets orally. Blood tests were done before therapy, 4-5 times during therapy, and 2-3 weeks after therapy. The blood studies included (1) erythrocyte sedimentation rate, (2) the number of the various types of leucocytes, (3) hemoglobin content, and (4) color index. There was a constant acceleration of the erythrocyte sedimentation rate, usually accompanied by elevation of body temperature in patients receiving the drug intramuscularly. Patients receiving the drug by mouth had no temperature elevation, and their sedimentation rate was within normal limits. Types A, B and C remissions of schizophrenia occurred in 6 of the 15 patients given the drug intramuscularly. Type D remission occurred in 4 of these patients. In 5 patients there was no evidence of clinical improvement. Of the patients receiving oral medication, 5 had type A, B and C remissions, 6 had type D. There was no effect in 4 patients. The authors found no parellelism between the hematological changes and clinical efficacy of aminazine therapy in schizophrenia. The differences in the changes in the blood in the two groups were attributed to the method of administration of the drug.

THE PROBLEM OF THE IRRITATING EFFECT OF IONIZING RADIATION. 24 June 63, 12p. 21 refs. JPRS: 19806.
Order from OTS $0.50 63-31095

Trans. of Akademiya Nauk Gruzinskoi SSR [Tiflis]. Soobshcheniya, 1963, v. 30, no. 2, p. 213-220.

DESCRIPTORS: *Radiation effects, *Conditioned reflex, X rays, Respiration, Blood pressure, Dosage.

X-ray irradiation of various topographic anatomical areas of the body of rabbits, at a definite gradient of dose strength, manifests characteristics of an irritating agent in regard to certain physiological functions. Upon combination of a brief action X-rays with electrocutaneous irritation, it is possible to develop defensive conditioned reflexes to the radiation effect in total irradiation, as well as in local irradiation of the head and abdominal area. Following realization of a total dose of fractional action of X-rays equalling 50 r and more in total irradiation, and 1000 r and more in local irradiation of the head, the electro-defensive reflexes are sharply reduced or disappear completely, regardless of the fact whether the electrocutaneous reinforcement was continued or terminated. CHANGES IN THE ANTERIOR LOBE OF THE HYPOPHYSIS DURING IRRADIATION AND COOLING. 5 July 63, 7p. 12 refs. JPRS: 20037.
Order from OTS $0.50 63-31211

Trans. of Problemy Endokrinologii i Gormonoterapii (USSR) 1963, v. 9, no. 3, p. 3-7.

DESCTIPROTS: Endocrine glands, *Pituitary gland, *Radiation effects, *Hypothermia.

As established, 24 hours after the irradiation, i.e. at the period of maximal corticosterone secretion by the adrenal glands, there was a marked adrenal hypertrophy with the appearance of vacuolized delta-basophils in the anterior lobe of the hypophysis. As a result of a 3-day cooling of experimental animals there was hypertrophy of the adrenal glands, thymus involution and vacuolization of the delta-basophillic cells in the hypophysis. Similarity of the changes in the delta-basophillic cells of the anterior lobe of the hypophysis, appearing during the early postirradiational periods and as a result of coling, permits them to be regarded as a morphological manifestation of intensified ACTH secretion in response to unfavourable effects. INVESTIGATION OF GALLIUM OXALATES. [1963] 10p. 7 refs.

Trans. of Ukr[ainskii] Khim[icheskii] Zhur[nal] (USSR) 1962, v. 28 [no. 6] p. 675-681.

DESCRIPTORS: *Gallium compounds, *Oxalates, *Complex compounds, *Dissociation, Hydrogen ion concentration.

Composition of gallium oxalate complexes were studied in acidic media by the isomolar series method. It was demonstrated that for pH $\leq$ 1 the simplest complex, $GaC_2O_4^+$, is formed. When hydrogen ion concentration is reduced, formation of complexes with a higher coordination number is observed. Thus, for pH $\geq$3, the dominat complex is $Ga(C_2O_4)_2^-$. Dissociation constant of the gallium mono-oxalate complex was determined by studying ultra-violet light-absorption. It is equal to 5.85×10^{-9}. A similar value was obtained by studying equilibrium with thiocyanide and salicylate complexes of iron. The higher-order dissociation constants of di- and tri-oxalate complexes of gallium were computed at 3.06×10^{-6} and 3.30×10^{-2} respectively, and total dissociation constant of the coordination-saturated complexion $Ga(C_2O_4)_3^{3-}$ was found to be 5.81×10^{-16}. Experiments were conducted to regenerate a tobacco leaf from tobacco scrap, which could be used as inner wrapper in cigars. The binder to be used originates in the tobacco itself. About 6% pectin was successfully isolated from tobacco dust. The quantity of pectin isolated from tobacco dust is not adequate to bind all the extracted tobacco dust in one coherent firm foil. A usable adhesive was obtained by direct carboxymethylization of cellulose contained in the tobacco plant. Synthetic inner wrappers produced with its help are distinguished by a pleasant taste of the smoke, good burning qualities and high mechanical strength. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Ruthenium, *Solvent extraction, *Fission products, Solutions, *Nitric acid *Amines.

Examination of the fission products (Cs, Sr, Ce(III), Zr + Nb, and Ru) showed that only ruthenium is readily extracted by TOA from nitrate solution. Of the different compounds of ruthenium that probably exist in nitric acid solution, the most readily extracted by TOA is a nitroso complex. Comparison of the various elements extracted by TOA from nitric acid solutions shows that elements are more extractable by this reagent whose ions have a greater tendency to complex with NO_3 - ions in water solution. It is shown that the distribution coefficients of nitrosyl ruthenium in extraction by $TOA \cdot HNO_3$ are much higher at low acidities and significantly lower at higher nitric acid concentrations in the aqueous phase. The distribution coefficients of the most extractable nitroso compound of ruthenium had a second-power dependence on the $TOA \cdot HNO_3$ concentration in the extractant; with this compound, apparently, the complex $RuNO(NO_3)_3$ forms, with two molecules of $TOA \cdot HNO_3$ (Author)

The optimal pH value and the specificity of the reaction were studied as criteria for evaluating reagents for zirconium. The colour of 16 reagents and their coloured complexes with zirconium, titanium and aluminium was investigated in relation to the pH of the solution. The criteria taken for comparing the reagents for zirconium were the variation in the optical density ΔD with a change in the acidity within the limits $pH_{opt} \pm 0.5$, together with the permissible amounts of the elements per 1 μg zirconium. An examination was also made of the action of certain masking substances on the coloured compounds of zirconium, titanium and aluminium with the reagents here investigated. Xylenol orange and methylthymol blue were found to be the most suitable reagents for the determination of zirconium. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: Salts, *Potassium compounds, *Sodium compounds, *Magnesium compounds, *Sulfates, Solutions, Electrical conductance, *Electrochemistry, Chemical analysis.

Surveyed were the literature data and the theoretical bases of the problem of the application of the measurements of the electroconductivity as a method of physicochemical analysis of salt systems in aqueous solutions. Measured were the specific electroconductivities of the systems Na_2SO_4-K_2SO_4-H_2O, $MgSO_4$-H_2O and $MgSO_4$-Na_2SO_4-H_2O like this that the total concentrations were kept constant for each system, and that just the ratios of the components were changed. The deviations of the measured electroconductivities from the found ones for the systems Na_2SO_4-K_2SO_4-H_2O and $MgSO_4$-Na_2SO_4-H_2O under the conditions employed do not surpass the limits of experimental error. The deviation of the found electroconductivity from the calculated one in the system MgO_4-K_2SO_4-H_2O was a maximum at the equimolecular ratio of the components in the mixture. This talks in favor of the fact that in the solution a binary salt is formed of the composition $MgSO_4 \cdot K_2SO_4$. (Author)

The authors discuss a generalized method of saponification to determine the percentage of vinyl chloride in mixed polymers of vinyl chloride and vinyl acetate. All the methods heretofore used and which lead to reproducible results for mixed polymers produced by solution or emulsion, are badly suited to determinations of polymers obtained by the suspension type of polymerization. These authors propose a method using along with saponifying agents, solvents which are strongly polar. By the data given is shown the possibility, by judicious application, of obtaining reproducible results for any type of mixed polymer of vinyl chloride with vinyl acetate. (Author)

Trans. of Société Chimique de France. Bull[etin] 1944 [ser. 5] v. 11, p. 2-6.

Anhydrous ferric metaphosphate $3P_2O_5$, Fe_2O_3 can be prepared either by having the ferric oxide dissolved in phosphoric acid or in metaphosphoric acid through dehydration of a hydrated ferric metaphosphate, or also by a direct combining of Fe_2O_3 with P_2O_5. The anhydrous ferric metaphosphate will always exhibit the same structure under the X-ray regardless of the manner in which it is prepared; the crystals which form are monoclinic or microscopic. At between 200° and 250° the effect of the phosphoric acid on the ferric oxide gives a hydrated phosphate $2P_2O_5$, Fe_2O_3, $3H_2O$; the latter dehydrates, giving a phosphate $2P_2O_5$, Fe_2O_3 characterized by its X-ray diagram. A method of preparation of a vanadium catalyst for the oxidation of SO_2, based on a support and on compounds of vanadium and potassium sulfate is presented. The support is mixed with a powdered alloy of vanadium pentoxide with potassium sulfate, pyrosulfate, or bisulfate in the ratio $V_2O_5:K_2O < 1$, followed by shaping and roasting of the mixture obtained at temperatures above 350°. To increase the activity of the catalyst, 5 to 20% of sulfur is introduced into the mixture. To increase the mechanical strength of the catalyst, gypsum is introduced into the mixture, in an amount of 5 to 20% of the weight of the support.

DESCRIPTORS: *Nitric acid, *Butyl radicals, *Phosphates, Phase studies, Solvents, Toluenes, Benzenes, Kerosine, Complex compounds.

The influence of the nature of the solvents on the distribution of nitric acid between water and tributyl phosphate was investigated in the case of an ionic strength of the solution of 1, 0, 5 and 3. The maximum value of K_p in nitric acid solution with the ionic strength of 3 is obtained if toluene is used as solvent for tributyl phosphate. The change of K_p by the nature of the solvent in the case of an ionic strength of 3 is to be divided as follows: toluene, benzene, kerosene, CCl_2F-CCl_2F, CCl_4. The following variation of the above sequence takes place if the ionic strength is reduced to 1: kerosene, toluene, benzene, CCl_2F--CCl_2F, CCl_4. Comparative investigations of the extractions in $HClO_4$ and HNO_3 solutions showed that the complex $HClO_4$. TBPh is to a greater extent polar than the complex HNO_3. TBPh.

An original apparatus was devised for measuring the dissociation pressure of H_3PO_4 within the temperature range from 150-300°. This apparatus may be successfully used in studying the equilibria of other systems, for example in studying crystal hydrates. A method was developed for determining small amounts of $H_4P_2O_7$ in presence of large amounts of HPO_3. The P_2O_5-H_2O equilibrium was studied by measuring the dehydration pressure of H_3PO_4 in the temperature range from 150-300° and by analyzing the composition of the condensed phase corresponding to the given pressure.

In order to obtain a basis for comparison between various methods of preparation of sodium methylate, this compound was prepared from methanol and sodium oxide or caustic soda. The methylate content of the various reaction products was determined. An attempt was made by means of the reaction of caustic soda with methanol to determine the approximate position of the equilibrium between caustic soda, methanol, sodium methylate and water. Raw material costs were determined for the various methylate solutions prepared. (Author)

In contrast to the aqueous furfural actually applied, this solvent does not polymerize in the vat of column, has a smaller boiling temperature, while the butadiene is more soluble in it. It was shown during the investigation on butadiene separation from C_4 fraction at emulsification, that the emulsification course is more efficient, than the usual course. (Author)

Guanyl-o-alkylisourea hydrochlorides (R, CH_3 and C_2H_5) were newly synthesized by addition reaction of dicyandiamide and alcohol in the presence of dry hydrochloric acid at room temperature. When conducted at a relatively high temperature in the presence of a concentrated acid, this reaction proceeded further and guanylurea hydrochloride and [the corresponding] alkyl chloride formed. Guanyl-o-alkylisoureas were stable when in neutral state but they hydrolyzed readily in acidic aqueous solutions and yielded [the corresponding] guanylurethans. It was also discovered that they formed biguanide quantitatively by reaction with ammonia. This reaction was believed to be a convenient route in the syntheses of biguanide derivatives from amines. Described are the results of a study of the structural-mechanical properties of glutinous potato starch, and also of amylose and amylopectin solutions. Expressed is the supposition that the structure in amylose solutions originates on account of coagulation and the following passing over of amylose into a mycrocrystalline state. The development of a structure in glutinous potato starch is explained by the presence of amylose as a binding link between the amylopectin macromolecules which by themselves do not form a structure. By the action of formaldehye and HCl on mesitylene (1-2 mol formaldehyde to 1 mol mesitylene) one or two CH_2Cl groups were introduced into the molecule. In 1'. chloro-1. 2. 4. 6 tetramethyl benzene, the chlorine atom, under the effect of the methyl groups in positions 2, 4 and 6 has a heightened reactivity. These methyl groups have a similar effect also on other substituents in 1' position. This is shown, for example, by the fact that 1'. acetoxy-1. 2. 4. 6. tetramethyl benzene upon heating with methyl alcohol HCl gives a mixture of 1'-methoxy-1. 2. 4. 6-tetramethyl benzene. 1'. chloro-1. 2. 4. 5-tetramethyl benzene has, according to advance measurements, dissolved in fluid sulfur dioxide, an electric conductivity about 10 times that of benzyl chloride. Thus, the dissocation of the chlorine atom at the 1' position is also heightened under the influence of the methyl groups. (Author)

It was shown, that the chloromethylation of n. propyl benzene, n. butyl benzene, isobutyl benzene and cyclohexyl benzene leads to the formation of mixtures of ortho-and parachloromethyl derivatives. There was carried out a comparison of the relationships of ortho- and para-isomers, which were obtained upon the chloromethylation of alkyl benzenes, with analogous data as to their nitration. The observed facts are explained from the point of view of the spatial interactions which take place during these reactions of aromatic, electrophilic substitution (the steric factor). (Author)

The assumption is stated that the change of charge of atom, or atomic group, in organic molecules, arising as a consequence of mutual interaction of atoms and atomic groups, is limited by certain limits, both with respect to electron donor and to electron acceptor capacity. From the viewpoint of this assumption, the dipole moments of nitro- and halogenated derivatives of benzene and furan and also of nitro- derivatives of furan were examined. It is shown that the assumption about limited donor-acceptor capacity allows us correctly to calculate the dipole moments of derivatives of furan as vector sums of moments of bonds and atomic groups with calculation of mutual interaction of atoms. Leucine and valine occupy specific positions in protein molecules. The major portion of leucine is liberated at the beginning of hydrolysis (acid, alkaline, or pancreatic). On the basis of this fact, a large fraction of leucine may be regarded as the terminal amino acid in the polypeptide chain. Thus the distribution of leucine and valine in the protein molecule would seem to exemplify the periodicity anticipated in Bergmann's theory, leucine occupying predominantly the exopeptidic, and valine, the endopeptidic, positions. Finally, the different course of hydrolysis observed with the various studied proteins (casein, edestin, globin and zein) shows that their structure is not identical. (Author)

METHOD FOR THE CONTINUOUS CRYSTALLIZATION OF SOLIDS OUT OF THEIR SOLUTIONS. [1963] 8p. 3 refs.

DESCRIPTORS: *Crystallization, Solids, Solutions, Cooling, Oils, *Anthracenes, *Calcium compounds, Nitrates, Phosphates, Tanks (Containers).

A method for the crystallization of solids out of a solution by rapid cooling, by continuously passing the solution into a tank, from which the crystal mass thus obtained is continuously removed is described. In the tank is an apparatus designed to keep the solution in motion and to keep the wall free from crystals. The tank is cooled only at the wall, with maintenance of a difference in temperature which promotes the production of small crystals. Part of the solution is led by means of a current toward the cooled wall, which results in crystallization and crystal growth, whereupon the crystals are led by means of a current directed away from the cooled wall toward the warmer inner part of the tank. Solution of the small crystals takes place, and the remaining crystals are again carried along with the current directed toward the wall. (Author)

The domains of existence were determined for the different types of phases (isotropic solutions, isotropic liquid precipitates, anisotropic liquid precipitates and solid precipitates) that can exist together in different colloidal systems when one varies the solubility conditions by adding salt or a solvent. The systems which were studied are protein solutions in water in the presence of salt, cellulose acetate solutions in the mixture of chloroform and ethyl alcohol, and aqueous solutions of soap in the presence of salt. The representative diagrams of the different existence regions and phase equilibria have the same general behaviour for very different colloidal systems. The question of knowing to what extent the diagrams can be compared to real phase diagrams, was discussed and to what extent the phase rule can be applied to colloidal systems. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: Hydrocarbons, *Methanes, Degradation, Reaction kinetics, *Electrolysis, Effectiveness.

In studying the electro-cracking of methane (and of other hydrocarbons) it was established that the quantity of the compound reacting is proportional to the energy of the discharge and to the fraction of the remaining initial hydrocarbon. In another interpretation the electro-cracking is a first order reaction, the rate constant being proportional to the energy of the discharge and inversely proportional to the initial quantity of hydrocarbon. As characteristics of the kinetics of the process the conception of the energy efficiency of the discharge with respect to methane electro-cracking has been introduced with the dimensions: quantity of hydrocarbon/energy. The physical meaning of the energy efficiency is the quantity of hydrocarbon reacting per unit of energy consumption in the initial period of the reaction, i.e. at zero conversion. It has been shown that the energy efficiency of the forms of discharge active with respect to methane is practically independent of the geometrical dimensions of the discharge, of the current density, of the power and of the amount of dilution or the initial gas with hydrogen, and decreases with increasing pressure. DESCRIPTORS: *Electrolysis, *Zinc compounds, *Sulfates, *Surface-active substances, Surface tension, *Electrodeposition, *Phenols, *Amines, Molecular isomerism.
Phenols and amines had a surface active effect up to high current densities in zinc sulfate solutions. The para-isomers of phenols were more active than ortho- and meta-isomers and they increased cathode polarization. The current efficiency of zinc and the cathode polarization are not always directly related. Amidol strongly polarized the cathode, but the main process was liberation of hydrogen. Hydroquinone suppressed the discharge of hydrogen ions while the current efficiency of zinc was high. When metal ions more electropositive than zinc were added to the electrolyte, besides the amines and phenols, depolarization of the cathode resulted and the current efficiency of zinc decreased. The ions which were more electropositive than zinc ions were deposited with the zinc.

Various equations for mono- and polymolecular adsorption isotherms, pertaining to homogeneous surfaces, in which account has been made of adsorbate-adsorbate interaction have been applied to reported experimental data on the adsorption of hydrocarbons, nitrogen, argon, krypton, sulfur dioxide, ammonia, methylamine, methanol and water vapors. Approximate equations for mono- and polymolecular adsorption isotherms containing the equilibrium constants K'_1 of adsorbate-adsorbent and K_n of adsorbate-adsorbate interaction satisfactorily describe the experimental data in the region of mono-and of the initial stages of polymolecular adsorption above the critical temperature of the adsorption layer. As the adsorbate-adsorbent interactions weaken and the adsorbate-adsorbate relatively increase, the isotherms change their shape from convex at the initial part with single points of inflection (n - alkanes) to initially concave, (with two points of inflection nitrogen, argon, krypton, sulfur dioxide, methylamine, methanol) and to concave throughout with no inflection (water). The ammonia adsorption isotherm is concave over a broad range of relative pressures. (Author) (See also 63-10176)

Solutions of tars and asphaltenes in benzene, nitrobenzene, and naphthalene were measured cryoscopically, and the association of tars and asphaltenes from Romashki oil in the solutions was shown to depend on solvent polarity and temperature. The phenomenon of association of tars and asphaltenes in solutions and its dependence on concentration and temperature, were also studied thru polarization measurements; this enabled us to find a qualitative difference between asphaltene and tar solutions, expressed in the opposite character of their temperature dependences of polarization (in the concentration range up to 10--12%). It was shown that in solutions of tars and asphaltenes in naphthalene at temperatures near 80° and in the concentration range up to 16--18% association phenomena do not occur to any appreciable degree, which makes it possible to obtain consistent results on determination of the molecular weights of tars and asphaltenes by the cryoscopic method in naphthalene in a wide concentration range (2--18%). The molecular weights of tars, determined at concentrations not over 3.5% in nitrobenzene or 2% in benzene, are practically the same as those determined in naphthalene. (Author)

Catalytic additions of compounds of elements with a variable valence, namely Cu_2Cl_2 and MnO_2, considerably lower the flash point of the ammonium perchlorate. Ammonium perchlorate without additions does not burn at atmospheric pressure, room temperature, and tube diameter of 22 mm. It acquires the ability to burn under these conditions when we add to it not less than 5% MnO_2 or $KMnO_4$, not less than 2% $CuCl_2 \cdot 2H_2$, or not less than 0.5% Cu_2Cl_2 (the last addition was tested with a tube diameter of 34 mm). The addition of 20% glucose to ammonium perchlorate (with a catalytic addition of Cu_2Cl_2) only slightly increases its burning velocity. This fact indicates that the leading process is the burning of ammonium perchlorate as an individual substance, whereas oxidation of the combustible substances is a secondary process accomplished by the combustion products of ammonium perchlorate. It was established that the addition of magnesium to NaPb alloy does not modify the character of the kinetic curves of the reaction forming tetraethyllead. The relationship between the induction period and the temperature is also unchanged by this addition. It was shown that the addition of up to 0.2% magnesium to a lead-sodium alloy notably decreases the induction period. A further increase of the magnesium concentration in the alloy produces an increase of the induction period. (Author) (See also 63-10977)

The sublimation pressures of cesium, rubidium and potassium chloride were determined according to the transport method with the use of nitrogen as the transport gas to be in the respective temperature ranges of 507° to 635°C for CsCl, 558 to 675°C for RbCl and 582 to 751° for KCl. The alkali chloride sublimate obtained was determined by means of electromatic titration with 0.01 and 0.001N $AgNO_3$ and the pressures calculated under the hypothesis that the salt vapors consist only of single molecules. A limit to the usability of the transport method was not observed in the experiments described. At the chosen temperature ranges, the pressure found was represented in the log p, $\frac{1}{T}$ diagram and was compared with the preceding literature data. The entropies of vaporization and sublimation at the melting point of the salt were calculated. (Author)

The oxidation kinetics of uranium dioxide with atmospheric oxygen in the range of from 165-800° and air pressures of 2.5-600 mm Hg was investigated. The values of apparent activation energy of the process was calculated at various stages of oxidation. Investigated were the kinetic characteristics of UO_2 oxidation with pure oxygen at a range of from 125 to 330° and p_{O_2} = 100 mm Hg. Phase conversion schemes were introduced during the oxidation of uranium dioxide at various temperature ranges. The effect of additions of alkali metal carbonates and oxides of ThO_2, SrO_2, TiO_2 on the kinetic characteristics of UO_2 oxidation process with air was investigated. An explanation of their effects is given. (Author)

Order from OTS $0.50 63-31206

Trans. of Akademiya Nauk SSSR. Izvestiya. Seriya Biologicheskaya, 1963 [v. 28] no. 2, p. 249-260.

DESCRIPTORS: *Sulfur, Deposits, Geochemistry, *Microorganisms, Analysis, *Economic geology, Deserts.

Microbiological studies made in the Kara Kum sulfur hills show that the initial process in the formation of elemental sulfur deposits was a process of microbiological reduction of the sulfates. The great part played by T. thiooxidans in oxidation of sulfur to sulfuric acid was established in the Kara Kum sulfur hills. Particularly vigorous sulfur oxidation processes occur in the lower, moistened parts of the hills, where the number of T. thiooxidans reaches 10,000-100,000 cells per gram of ore. Migration of aluminum and iron is observed with decomposition of the bedrock by sulfuric acid and precipitation of them when they enter the rock of the center section or fringe rock with a neutral pH. POTASH- AND ROCKSALT-MINING IN THE PAPERS TO THE INTERNATION EARTH-PRESSURE CONVENTION IN LEIPZIG. [1963] 30p. (figs. omitted) 14 refs.
Order from SLA $2.60 63-16265

Trans. from Bergbautechnik (East Germany) 1960, v. 10, no. 1.

DESCRIPTORS: *Mining engineering, *Potassium compounds, *Carbonates, *Rock salt, Earth, Pressure, *Conferences, Germany.

Of the 24 papers to the International Earth-pressure Convention, Leipzig, 1958, there are abstracted 7 which are of particular importance to salt mining. Discussed especially thoroughly are the papers of Höfer and of Kvapil, which report on measurements in salt mines and experiments on salt rock in the laboratory, and which make new contributions to the question of the stability of our salt solids. Both authors stress the influence of the factor of time. The paper of Avershin deals with the tension distribution, in, above and below ore- and salt-solids. Buchheim was able on the basis of geophysical measurements (ultrasound) to present documentation for ascertaining the tension distribution in the salt solids, while Watznauer documented very impressively the general question of the existence of so-called tectontic residual-tension and their origin. The paper of Tincelin and Sinou from the Lorraine iron-ore mining was included in the remarks because it deals mainly with chamber-pillar mining, which enables conclusions for salt mining, and especially because it discussed problems with which the salt miner has hitherto occupied himself with only little. Finally, in a closing paper, Spackeler attempted to reduce to a common denominator the various controversial questions discussed at the Convention, especially the remarks of the coal- and salt-miners, for warning against uncritical extension of the research results of other mining branches to salt earth. (Author)

A method of thermal analysis was worked out, based on the principle of automatic control of the temperature difference between the wall of a furnace and the sample being investigated (labile thermoregulator). The labile thermoregulator insures the correct securing of the physical expression of isothermal and polythermal processes. The method is just as sensitive as the differential method and leads to values of the thermal effects which are in very close agreement with the data obtained by static determinations. The principle of the labile thermoregulator, that of keeping a constant difference in temperature during heating or cooling can be applied to many technical fields, even in drying techniques. Order from SLA $1.60 63-14023

DESCRIPTORS: *Ion exchange resins, Preparation, Particles, Condensation reactions, Polymerization, *Hydrodynamics, Equations.

The authors studied the influence of the experimental apparatus and physical conditions on the size of grains formed during suspension polycondensation in inert medium. The results were given mathematical formulation and compared with results of other authors. It was shown that the dependence of grain diameter on the Weber number forms a common basis for the types studied of ion exchange resins of spherical shape, produced by polycondensation. In addition to the dependence of the grain size on the Weber number, a narrower hydrodynamic relationship was studied for the case of Katex FN, starting from the concept of a pumping action of the stirrer. Experiments were conducted in vessels with thermometer wells as the only turbulence, producing projections. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Batteries and components, *Alkaline cells, Preparation, *Zinc electrodes, *Nickel electrodes, Silver electrodes, Graphite, Electrodeposition.

The patent involves a method for the preparation of alkaline batteries in which the active constituents of the negative electrodes consist of zinc which is precipitated from a solution of zinc oxide in caustic alkali, and in which the active constituents of the positive electrodes are prepared of nickel oxide and/or silver oxide with or without graphite and/or nickel flakes, characterized in that each negative carrier plate which consists entirely or mainly of nickel and has a hard and pure surface, undergoes a pretreatment before the deposition of zinc, by which pretreatment the nickel becomes charged with hydrogen. Each negative carrier plate undergoes an electrolytic pretreatment in a caustic alkali solution, by means of which the smooth nickel surface becomes saturated with hydrogen. Each negative carrier plate of the battery is enclosed in a lattice, which is covered with an ebonite plate to prevent an excessive deposition of zinc on this place, caused by strong currents used in the charging.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF A STEADY FIELD CATHODE. [1963] 4p. 4 refs.
Order from SLA $1.10 63-18087

Trans. of die Naturwissenschaften (West Germany) 1962, v. 49, no. 9, p. 201.

DESCRIPTORS: *Cathodes, Construction, *Aluminum electrodes, Coatings, Dielectrics, Aluminum compounds, Oxides, Emissivity.

Cathodes of the type Al-Al_2O_3-Me were investigated. (Me signifies a metal, e.g. Ag, Au, Pt, etc.). A voltage of a few tens of volts is sent between the Al-electrode and the semi-permeable metallic layer above. If the thickness of the dielectric is small enough, a strong electric field is generated which causes an emission of electrons from the metallic substrate. A part of these electrons can penetrate through the dielectric and the upper electrode and be emitted into the vacuum. In comparison with field cathodes using porous layers of magnesium oxide, these cathodes have the advantage that the starting process is eliminated. In comparison with the pointed field cathodes they have the advantage of using plane surfaces that can be of any shape; mechanically they are less flimsy, and their use does not involve either an extreme vacuum or a high voltage.

Systematic filter calculations were carried out with the aid of electronic computer systems and the resultant data were compiled in catalog form. Tables show the standardized values of the circuit elements of the Chebyshev low-pass filters and Cauer parameter low-pass filters with resistive termination at either end for the degrees n = 4 to n = 9 and for 11 different reflection coefficients p at a time (and for 11 different maximum variations of the insertion loss within the pass band in each case, respectively). Designing filters with the aid of the tables is shown with reference to typical applications.

Order from OTS or SLA $22.25 63-19323

Unedited rough draft trans. of mono. Osnovy Radiolakatsii, Moscow, 1961, 384p.

DESCRIPTORS: *Radar, Radar targets, Range finding, *Radar equipment, Radar signals, Radar tracking, Electromagnetic warfare.

Basic attention has been devoted to methods of radar location and ascertaining the relationships between the tactical and engineering parameters of radars. The problems of engineering realization of the various methods are set forth in less detail and only insofar as is necessary to illustrate the essence of the method being considered. The manual contains ten chapters in which are considered in sequence general considerations concerning radar, the reflecting properties of radar targets, methods for radio range finding and radio direction finding, the detection of radar signals, factors determining the range of radar and the accuracy of determination of the location of the targets, methods for the selection of moving targets, the relaying of radar information and, finally, combat radar techniques. The present manual gives significant development to methods for statistical analysis of the dependence of the tactical parameters of radars upon the engineering parameters. An exposition of the methods and an anslysis of the position-determination error, as well as an analysis of the dynamic properties of automatic radio range finders as pulse followup systems is introduced.

Order from SLA $3.60 63-14406

Trans. of [NTZ: Nachrichtentechnische Zeitschrift] (West Germany) 1952 [v. 5] no. 10, p. 456-467.

DESCRIPTORS: *Radio communication systems, *Radio equipment, *Antennas, Antenna configurations, Electric cables, Coaxial filters, Multiplex, Filters (Electromagnetic wave), Attenuation, Transmitter-receivers, Direction finding, Multichannel telephone systems, High frequency, Lens antennas, Parabolic antennas.

The basic aspects in planning antenna installations for directional radio systems are touched upon and the more important characteristics of the antennas are defined. Described are an elliptical (lens) antenna with an edge length of 1.75 meters and parabolic antennas 3, 2, and 1.2 meters in diameter, whose characteristics are compared in the 2450-2700 Mc. band. The elliptical antenna attains an efficiency of 48%, a mean Δ m value of 7% and a feedback attenuation of more than 5.5 N. (48 db); the parabolic antenna a mean efficiency 60 to 55%, a mean Δ m value of 16 to 27% and a feedback attenuation of 5.5 to 4.5 N. (48 to 39 db). A new centimeter-wave coaxial cable with 5.5 N/km (48 db/km) attenuation for simple installations is mentioned. A new cavity-type diplexer for simultaneous operation of a single antenna and a dual-circuit coaxial filter are described. The attenuation in relation to the frequencies to be cut off amounts to more than 8 N. (70 db) and the acceptor attenuation to less than 0.1 N. (0.9 db). Finally, a report is given on a multiplex filter system with frequency-wise successively arranged filters for directional link operation of three transmitters or three receivers. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Shafts, Rotation, *Deformation, Torque, *Measuring devices (Electrical and electronic), Design, Measurement, Telemeter systems.

The special feature of the device proposed is that a string vibrator is used in combination with a telemetric deformation-recording system containing a high-frequency oscillator, the carrier frequency of which is modulated by the oscillation frequency of the vibrator, while the signals are picked up by a receiver which is loaded by a frequency meter with a scale calibrated in units of twist angle. An arrangement of this kind makes it possible to eliminate slip-ring devices.

The book deals with the determination of the physical nature, character, and magnitude of deviation of guided vehicles from idealized motion trajectories expected on the basis of design considerations. The guided objects, together with the complex of devices used to control them, are in this case considered as unified systems possessing a limited number of parameters that characterize error magnitudes under various conditions of object motion. The book aims to give an approximate qualitative evaluation of the basic factors affecting the accuracy of guided objects. At the same time, the book presents in the simplest and clearest possible form the basic physical processes occurring in systems containing controlled members. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Proteins, *Flour, Air, Separation.

A process in described how protein displacements can be obtained in flour by air sifting. The flours are split into a protein-rich fraction and another, containing little protein. By varying the sifter adjustment, flour with a desired protein content can be obtained within certain limits. It is advisable to employ impact granulation before air sifting in order to have more free protein available for the desired protein displacements. (Author)

EFFECT OF VARIOUS DIETS ON GASTRIC SECRETION WITH LONG INTERVALS BETWEEN MEALS AND WHEN MEALS ARE TAKEN HAPHAZARDLY. [1962] [11]p. 4 refs. FASEB manuscript no. S 83-2.
Order from OTS or SLA $1.60 63-15988

Trans. of Voprosy Pitaniya (USSR) 1962, v. 21, no. 4, p. 25-30.

DESCRIPTORS: *Diet, *Gastrointestinal system, Stomach, *Secretion, Starvation.

The effect of feeding patterns, long intervals between meals, and a haphazard arrangement of meals on gastric secretion was studied. Long intervals between meals resulted in a lower level of secretion and lower volume, digestive power, and acidity of the gastric juice due to the uneven strain on the stomach's functioning and its subsequent disturbances. Other results include a thick mucus secretion, disappearance of the reflex phase, and signs of dyspepsia. Normal secretion was slowly regained with the return to normal meal intervals. Irregular meals caused no definite trend in the secretory process. Periods of hyper-and hyposecretion, large amounts of mucus, low digestive power of gastric juice, increased acidity, and decreased free HCL were noted. Secretory patterns in the experimental dogs varied from one experiment to another. Indications of chronic hypertrophic gastritis were found in the gastric mucosa. All elements of the peripheral neurous were affected. These findings confirm the view that gastritis may result from prolonged functional changes in the stomach.

Order from OTS or SLA $1.10 63-19022

Trans. of Voprosy Pitaniya (USSR) 1962, v. 21, no. 3, p. 28-31.

DESCRIPTORS: *Aluminum, *Diet, Metabolism, *Phosphorus, Food, Cooking devices,

Food products of plant origin in general contain more Al than those of animal origin. Relatively high amounts of Al were found in lentils, peas, mushrooms, and spinach; large quantities were found in flour and rice. The commonly used vegetables contained less Al, but more than fruits. Very low amounts of Al exist in meat and meat products. The largest amount of P was found in meat, and then flour; insignificant amounts were found in fruits and vegetables. Experiments confirmed that the Al content of food prepared in Al utensils made in Czechoslovakia at least doubles. It was determined that an average diet may contain 160.1 mg of Al. Since a daily dose of 200 mg is harmless, these Al utensils may be safely used; however, they are not recommended for acidic foods. Increased doses of Al in rats affected their metabolism and increased the Al retention; Al accumulated in the liver, brain, and bones. Phosphorus is retained in the spleen and gastric wall. The growth rate of the experimental rats decreased. The solubility of Al compounds was considered in drawing conclusions. Results indicated that an increased intake of Al is undesirable.

The following improvements in rail production were recommended: (1) industrial verification of the efficacy of surface hardening the heads of carbon steel rails along their whole lengths with heat treatment, (2) organization of the manufacture of steel rails for laying on curved sections of track, (3) normalization of Bessemer steel rails, and an increase to 0.75% in their carbon contents, (4) reduction in stresses caused by cold leveling of rails, (5) increase in production of 25-meter rails, and (6) selection of the optimum ingot weight and method of deformation for producing heavy section rails. Suggested improvements of operating conditions for rails included: (1) solving the problem of the shape of head for type R-50 rails and of the head corner radii, (2) reducing the number of curved sectors and increasing curve radii on the principal freight-carrying lines, (3) laying of parallel tracks in sectors with high freight densities, (4) establishing optimum rail inclination on curved sectors and optimum raising of the outer rails at curves, (5) lubricating the lateral working faces of the outer rails at curves, and (6) improving the angle at which electric and diesel engine bogies enter small-radius curves.

DESCRIPTORS: *Cements, *Dolomite, Standards, *Binders.

Dolomites of the upper-Kazan layer of the bed on the right side of the Volga near village Petchishi can be used for the production of dolomite cement of a quite satisfactory quality. The optimum temperature of calcination of the dolomite in order to produce dolomite cement is about 800 ± 20°C. The cement from dolomites of the bed near the village Petchishi belongs to the type of local binding materials; it fully responds therefore to the requirements of the standard on local binding materials. Dolomite cement is a calcareous-magnesia binding substance with a somewhat higher resistance to the action of water. (Author)

Trans. of Japanese patent publication SHO 38-831, 8 Feb 63 (appl. SHO 35-10,544. 29 Mar 61) by The Broadcasting Corp. of Japan.

DESCRIPTORS: *Magnetic tape, Magnetic materials, Powders, *Cobalt compounds, *Ferrites, Manufacturing methods, *Antioxidants, Aldehydes.

The patent involves a method of manufacturing magnetic powder by coupling a small amount of cobalt oxide with iron oxide. Such low aldehydes as formalin, acetoaldehyde, etc. are mixed and added to a mixed aqueous solution of ferrous salt and a small amount of cobalt salt; to this mixture a mixed solution of an oxidizing agent and alkali is added; the oxidization of cobalt is prevented while the solution is made to react by heating in such a manner as to produce $CoO.n(FeO_3.Fe_2O_3)$ with the cobalt remaining bivalent; then this product is roasted at a low temperature between about 250 and 300°C into a cobalt ferrite magnetic powder which is apparently $CoO.nFe_2O_3$ (molar ratio n = from 8 to 24).

Trans. of Neftyanoe Khoz[yaistvo] (USSR) 1960, v. 38, no. 4, p. 14-20.

DESCRIPTORS: Porosity, *Porous materials, *Petroleum, *Combustion, Combustion chambers, *Thermal conductivity, Motion, Velocity, Numerical analysis.

In order to study the possibility of extraction of residual low-viscosity petroleum by the creation and movement of a combustion center in a porous medium, investigations were made under laboratory conditions in which a certain quanity of supplementary fuel in the form of a gas-air mixture was injected into a porous medium saturated with non-coking crude oils and ingnited. These investigations were carried out on models (illustrations are included) filled with sand with a porosity of 28 to 32% and a permeability of 1.5 to 3 Darcy. The results of the investigation permit the approximate calculation of the process of movement of the combustion center under reservoir conditions. It was established that with the combustion of methane-air mixtures of various concentrations the combustion center moves in the direction of filtration as well as in the opposite direction, and the velocity of motion of the combustion center is a direct function of the quanity of mixture injected and the latter depends on the physical parameters of the petroleum reservoir and in the first place on the permeability.

DESCRIPTORS: *Fibers (Synthetic), Extrusion, *Polyester plastics, Ethylenes, *Phthlates, Additives, *Silicones, Methyl radicals.

A process for the production of threads spun from melts which have an improved quality is described. The threads are made of polyesters of aromatic dicarboxylic acids, The polyesters are melted and extruded through a die. The melted polymers, before extrusion do not contain more than 0.5% of a stable, inactive, incompatible substance with a high boiling point. The stable, inactive, incompatible substance is a dimethylpolysiloxane which is present in a quantity of 0.05 to 0.2%. The polyester of an aromatic dicarboxylic acid is polyethylene terephtalate.

DESCRIPTORS: *Fibers (Synthetic), Fibers, *Cordage, Production.

Bulked yarn was manufactured according to the following steps. The extruded fibers passed through a stapling machine where they were stretched in the zone of gentle heating and stapled in the breaking zone; next they passed through a "crimping" device and were collected. About half of this high-shrinkage fiber entered a steaming chamber to produce a low-shrinkage fiber. (Fibers of different shrinkage properties are necessary to produce bulked yarn.) The slivers then entered a breaking and blending machine. The blend of fibers was processed on a shortened worsted spinning machine to twisted yarn, wound into skeins, and steamed in the setting machine or dyed with boiling. The heat contracted the high-shrinkage fibers which forced the low-shrinkage fibers to shift and bend: this increased the diameter or bulk of the yarn.

DESCRIPTORS: Size, *Fibers, *Woolen textiles, Surface properties, Mechanical properties, Textile industry.

In choosing the length of staple fiber, the following factors must be considered: the breed of sheep, quality and length of the fiber, and the combing and spinning processes. The length distribution of the fiber must be studied, and a determination made of its average length, of the mean square deviation, of the coefficient of variation, and of the size of the "base" (the specific weight of the five largest contiguous classes in per cent of the total weight). A recommended fiber length for worsted spinning was determined. It is more important to use staple fibers of varied length when they are carded separately than when they are combed together As the staple fiber length increased, the yarn became stronger in static and dynamic tests.

DESCRIPTORS: Deformation, *Clothing, Textiles, Fibers, *Cotton textiles, Elasticity, Structural properties, Mechanical properties.

Deformation of knitted fabric is governed by the structure and parameters of the loops. In stretching to the permissible pitch (A_{perm}), the height of the row of loops of doubleknit fabric approaches its lowest value with decreasing length of the loops and lower yarn count.

The load on one loop varies as the fabric is stretched to A_{perm}: it is greater when the loops are shorter and the yarn count lower. The difference in loads is greater when strips are tested. The ratio of the loads upon stretching to loop pitch A_{perm} to the load at break increases with decreasing length of the loops and lower yarn count. The ratio of the permissible loop pitches and pitches at break varies similarly to that of the loads but to a lesser extent. These investigations were made on only certain patterns of knitwear and are therefore limited.

The author analyzes conditions at the paint/metal interface on the basis of local cell potentials under various conditions of pH, on the assumption that the film-forming material will have a selective permeability for anions or cations. By using the film-forming vehicle as a membrane in dialysis and electro-dialysis tests he demonstrates that for corrosion resistance on iron or iron base alloys, the film-former should be selectively permeable to anions and the pigment basic in reaction. Organic bases, (such as the nitrogen bases used as pickling inhibitors) have an added protective effect through their formation of an electrostatically held layer about the anode which decreases the solution potential for the underlying metal in each local cell. A procedure for the preparation of reproductions is described. An original to be produced is exposed to the heat rays while it is in contact with a receptive sheet consisting of a thermoplastic polymer selected in the class consisting of polyethylene, polyvinylidene chloride, polystyrene, polyamides prepared from aliphatic dicarboxylic acids and aliphatic diamines, polycaprolactame, polyvinyl chloride, polyvinyl acetate, cellulose esters, cellulose ethers, rubber chlorohydrate and copolymers containing at least one constituent selected in the class consisting of vinylidene chloride, vinyl chloride, vinyl acetate, styrene, acrylonitrile, isobutylene, in the presence of a meltable or a sublimizable organic product selected in the class consisting of organic colorants, organic compounds containing a hydrophilic group and a hydrophobic group, natural and synthetic wax substances. The places of the receptive sheets correspond to the designs of the original become softened. The softened places of the sheet absorb the meltable organic product by forming in the thermoplastic sheet a reproduction of the original. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Photographic images, Preparation, *Photochemistry, *Polymerization, Organic compounds, Photographic chemicals, Photosensitivity, Electromagnetic waves, Radiation effects..

The invention regards a method for the production of a polymeric photographic image by photopolymerization, characterized in that one exposes to electro-magnetic radiations having a wavelength between the ultraviolet and the infrared, a layer that is sensitive to radiations, comprizing a polymerizable compound, containing the group CH= C<, an aromatic diazoic compound that is sensitive to radiation, of the series of p-phenylene diamines, and a photographic colloidal support, so that the diazoic compound is photo-decomposed in the exposed areas, one places the exposed layer in contact with an alkaline product that can form the diazotate of the diazoic compound, to obtain polymerization of the polymerizable compound, in the non-exposed areas, containing the residual diazoic compound, and one eliminates the non-polymerized residual compound of the exposed areas to obtain a polymeric photographic image that corresponds to the exposed areas of the layer. DESCRIPTORS: *Plastics, Manufacturing methods, Fluid flow, Elasticity, Viscosity, Plasticity.

Establishing the behavior patterns of flow should make it possible to resolve the fundamental technical problem: determining the optimum operational regimes, as well as the design of extrusion and die-casting equipment. The nature of the flow of plastics when they are utilized in the manufacture of articles from them is governed largely by the relationship between the forces of internal and external friction, together with the relaxational properties. The principal properties that determine the nature of flow can be explored with the aid of rotational instruments. In solving technological problems, with the exception of flow behavior, we have to make allowance for compressibility, homogenization, and chemical changes within the material. Articles possessing the required properties can be produced only when rheological studies are combined with investigations of the structural-mechanical properties of the articles produced. (Author)

The polymerization which vinyl chloride undergoes when it is mixed with a small quantity of radon in a spherical space was studied by a new technique characterized by the maintenance of a constant pressure. These experiments showed that at 26°C the ionic yield, measured by pressure applied in a given radius of reaction chamber, does not undergo any measurable change, due to the decrease in the quantity of radon to the half of its initial value. This paper indicates a new approach to the study of questions involving the correctness of formulation of problems for a single class of differential equations with constant coefficients and even for equations of a more general nature-convolution equations. The methods proposed have been conceived in recent years in connection with the substantiation of dispersion ratios. These methods are based on the properties of holomorphic envelopes for regions of special form, which arise during the analytical continuation of (generalized) functions, the properties of which reflect the fundamental requirements of the quantum field theory. METHOD OF OBTAINING IMPACT DEFORMING FORCES BY MEANS OF ELECTROHYDRAULIC SHOCKS. 28 Mar 63 [5]p. FTD-TT-63-25, AD-402 451

DESCRIPTORS: *Impact shock, *Deformation, Shock tubes, Hydraulic actuators, *Hydraulic research.

The invention concerns a method of obtaining impact deforming forces by means of electrohydraulic shocks produced in a fluid medium, which is distinguished by the fact that for the purpose of accomplishing forging, stamping, lamination beading, riveting, cleaning, forcing in, bending, breaking, cutting, and other kinds of processing of materials, electrohydraulic shocks are produced in a cylinder or chamber with a piston or membrane (or in a series of cylinders or chambers oriented in the necessary way), taking up the force of the shocks and transmitting them, directly or through a suitable instrument connected with them, to the object being processed, and the reverse shifting of the piston or membrane is accomplished by atmospheric pressure on slamming the cavitation void. The polymerization which vinyl chloride undergoes when it is mixed with a small quantity of radon in a spherical space was studied by a new technique characterized by the maintenance of a constant pressure. These experiments showed that at 26°C the ionic yield, measured by pressure applied in a given radius of reaction chamber, does not undergo any measurable change, due to the decrease in the quantity of radon to the half of its initial value. This paper indicates a new approach to the study of questions involving the correctness of formulation of problems for a single class of differential equations with constant coefficients and even for equations of a more general nature-convolution equations. The methods proposed have been conceived in recent years in connection with the substantiation of dispersion ratios. These methods are based on the properties of holomorphic envelopes for regions of special form, which arise during the analytical continuation of (generalized) functions, the properties of which reflect the fundamental requirements of the quantum field theory. The invention concerns a method of obtaining impact deforming forces by means of electrohydraulic shocks produced in a fluid medium, which is distinguished by the fact that for the purpose of accomplishing forging, stamping, lamination beading, riveting, cleaning, forcing in, bending, breaking, cutting, and other kinds of processing of materials, electrohydraulic shocks are produced in a cylinder or chamber with a piston or membrane (or in a series of cylinders or chambers oriented in the necessary way), taking up the force of the shocks and transmitting them, directly or through a suitable instrument connected with them, to the object being processed, and the reverse shifting of the piston or membrane is accomplished by atmospheric pressure on slamming the cavitation void. DESCRIPTORS: *Supersonic flow, *Axially symmetric flow, Pressure, Condensation, Reflection, Supersonic nozzles, *Subsonic flow, Density.

The flow of a supersonic axially symmetrical stream from a nozzle, with pressure in the stream greater or less than the pressure in the surrounding medium, is accompanied by the formation of jumps of condensation, which are reflected from the axis of symmetry. The existing methods enable one to compute the flow in such a stream, with the exception of the area of the reflection of the jumps in condensation from the axis. The problem is stated with its solution obtained for the flow of a gas in the region of the reflection of an incident jump in condensation from the axis of symmetry and the formation of a central jump in condensation converting a supersonic flow into a subsonic one. The accepted system of flow is confirmed by experiment. There is shown the possibility of reflecting an incident jump in condensation from the axis of symmetry without the formation of a subsonic flow. (Author)

The formation of wet pellets from fine grained dogger ore concentrate and from spathic fines was carried out, after addition of the required moisture, in an open-ended rotating drum with the use of a small inner heating. It was further recognized that for the preparation of workable prepared pellets with good physical properties, definite temperature range must be maintained, on the one hand to avoid sintering (iron silicate and calcium silicate), and on the other hand, to avoid underdone pellets. Continuous experimental operation up to the preparation of the finished oxidized pellets has been attained. The step-wise arrangement of the burners led to increase of the capacity. Reduction experiments with constant temperature showed clearly the more rapid breaking up of the oxide oxygen as compared with the sintered concentrate. (Author)

For the studies of $\gamma \rightarrow \alpha$ transformations, a series of differential dilatometers were utilized for the study of heat treatments on solid pieces. These apparatuses could be utilized up to cooling speeds of 4000^{o}/h. In order to study the transformations on welded joints (base metal and filler metal), corresponding to much higher speeds, it was necessary to develop an apparatus based on the detection of the appearance of a magnetic phase. A detailed description of the apparatus is given. It was possible to attain cooling speeds ranging from 10^{6o}/h (280^{o}/s) to 10^{4o}/h (3^{o}/s). Very rapid heating cycles were achieved as well as very variable maintenance periods. By means of graphical integration, it was possible to calculate the apparent magnetic phase percentage as a function of the temperature.

DESCRIPTORS: Temperature, *Steel, Steel castings, Molding, Hot working, *Fracture (Mechanics).

The hot tearing (cracking) resistance of ferrous alloy castings depends on the temperature at which they are poured. The resistance was raised by pouring at the liquid temperature, at which solidification commences.

As the pouring temperature was increased above the liquid temperature, there was a decrease in the hot tearing resistance of carbon and low-alloy pearlitic and austentitic steels and of white and grey irons cast with a chilled surface. The solidifying thin parts shrank and tore the massive parts, still mostly in a solid-liquid state. The hot tearing resistance of carbon and low-alloy pearlite steels decreased as the temperature of pouring below the liquid decreased. The resistance at various temperatures is related to the thickness of the solid shell and the shrinkage forces acting upon the casting.

The connection between the intensity of the magnetic aging by the absolute value of H_c and the phase composition of the deposit was established. The retarding of the magnetic aging is not so much related to the approximation of the dimensions of the deposit to the critical magnitude as to the transformation of $Fe_{16}N_2 \rightarrow Fe_4N$. The least aging effect and H_c is observed by the previous (early) formation of stable nitride Fe_4N. The stabilizing treatment of electrotechnical steel should consist in the creation of the conditions assuring the fullest deposition of nitrogen in the stable form. (Author)

The durability of steel subjected to wear by iron ore and agglomerates was investigated. The obtained data make it possible to assume that the alloyed hard solution resists better abrasive wear, than the ferrito-carbide mixture of the same composition and hardness. The use of cast alloyed high carbon steels in form of weldings raises the wear resistance of the working surfaces of machine parts.

COMPARATIVE EXPERIMENTS ON THE VELOCITY WITH WHICH VARIOUS CALCIUM ALLOYS TAKE UP NITROGEN. 8 Dec 48, 4p. 2 refs.
Order from OTS or SLA $1.10 63-10969

Trans. from unidentified German mono. pub. by I. G. Farbenindustrie, A.G.; Griesheim, n.d. (PB-70493D).

DESCRIPTORS: *Calcium alloys, *Nitrogen, Absorption, Velocity, Pressure, *Sodium alloys, *Barium alloys, Lithium alloys, Potassium alloys, Aluminum alloys.

Experiments were undertaken with the purpose of increasing the absorption velocity of calcium for nitrogen by the addition of other metals to the calcium. The results confirmed the statements in the literature that pure calcium reacts extremely slowly and that sodium has a strong activating effect. Further investigation showed that aluminum decreases with absorption velocity of previously activated calcium. Barium, alone and together with lithium, had no activating effects. Potassium was also ineffective. On the other hand, the addition of barium to calcium-sodium alloy had so intense an activating effect that the alloy burned in nitrogen with a free flame. (Author)

Research was performed on the conversion of water-free chromium chloride to metallic chromium by electrolysis in a melt. A greater productive capacity and lower consumption of electric energy were achieved by using a molten media instead of a water solution. An electrolyzer was improved to eliminate chlorination on the cathode metal. The design and operation of an earlier type of electrolyzer were compared to that of the improved apparatus, which prevented secondary oxidation-reduction reactions and increased the yield of chromium to a current efficiency of 86%.

The pressure of the oxidant gas has an influence on the phenomenon of corrosion of iron and steels by carbonic anhydride. This oxidation reaction is tributary to the local reactions at the oxide-gas interface. There is a fundamental difference between corrosion by CO_2 and corrosion by oxygen. This should explain the divergences between the various authors.

The release of Xenon-133 from bulk uranium monocarbide was studied at 950-1900° C in vacuum, whereby the chemical reaction between the specimen and the surrounding materials was avoided as much as possible It was noted that tantalum reacts with UC. When heated for the first time, a burst of activity was registered. Successive temperature increases resulted in some cases in a new burst, in other cases no new burst was noted. The experiments made an estimation of the activation energy possible, a value of about 70 kcal/mole was calculated for the temperature interval 950-1600° C. The release pattern is complicated, and though a number of specimens were investigated, new experiments must be performed in order to understand the release process. (Author) (See also EURAEC-361)

The release of xenon-133 from coarse powders of uranium monocarbide was measured. and in most cases acceptable release curves resulted. When heated for the first time, a pronounced burst of activity was noted, but successive temperature increases did not result in new bursts. However, if the temperature is raised above 1400° C, a distinct burst is noted, which may be caused by a beginning sintering. The evaluation of these experiments is preliminary only; as a BET surface determination has not been made, diffusion coefficients have not been calculated. The activation energy of the diffusion process may be estimated and is about 67 kcal/mole. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Rare gases, Radiochemistry, *Gas diffusion, Solids, Uranium, Uranium compounds, Carbides, Dioxides, *Fission products, Corrosion, Xenon, Powders, Single crystals, Heating.

The experimental difficulties encountered when measuring the diffusion of fission gases are pointed out. Release patterns in cases of obvious specimen corrosion are shown and compared with the expected form of a release curve. It is demonstrated that a false interpretation of a release curve may give too high a value of diffusion coefficient, and that there is no obvious way of discovering if a certain release pattern is caused by pure diffusion or not. Hitherto unpublished results on xenon release from uranium metal are cited, as well as preliminary data on xenon release from PAD heated uranium monocarbide. A critical review is also done on rare-gas diffusion from UO_2 powders and single crystals. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Heat transfer, *Stability, *Boiling water reactors, Nuclear reactors, Measurement, *Pressure gages, Pressurized water reactors.

Experiments were performed with a model of the first core loading of the Halden reactor. Slip factors and two-phase factors were determined. Also non-boiling lengths, exit void fraction and steam qualities were calculated. Calibrations and cold tests were carried out in preparation for the measurement of the differences between a uniform and a cosine flux distribution. A fast differential pressure gauge for detecting flow instabilities was developed. Measurements concerning the control characteristics of the rectifier-unit were made. The maximum flow rate for constant temperatures occurred at a lower power with a glass shroud than with an aluminum shroud with inlet holes in the hull. Experiments were made at high heat fluxes for clearing the Halden Boiling Water Reactor for operation at 10 megawatts and 30 atm. A qualitative measurement was made of the void fraction using a capacitance gauge at 90% of the channel height. There was some indication of hydraulic instability in the region of high power. A rod cluster element simulating a second core loading fuel channel was used to demonstrate the stability of flow conditions. The absolute and differential pressure gauges and the void gauge were further developed. Studies were made concerning void fraction, bubble dimension, and noise measurement. (See also EURAEC-158)

The alloy ZrNb3Sn1 which, in corrosion tests and mechanical tests, had proved to be a promising material, can be machined into thin-walled, seamless tubes such as are required for use in reactors. For the fabrication of tubes by extrusion, cold-rolling (Mannesmann process) and drawing, it is best to use a starting material thick-walled extruded tubes. The extruded tubes have a double fibre texture with $(10\bar{1}0)$ and $(11\bar{2}0)$ parallel to the axis of the tube, whereby the $(10\bar{1}0)$ component is strongly prevailing. The scattering in the orientation of the hexagonal basal plane parallel to the wall of the tube increases with decreasing degree of extrusion. In the two first cold-rolling stages, the extrusion texture remains practically unchanged. Drawn tubes exhibit an annular fibrous texture which was beginning to take shape already in the third reciprocating rolling run on account of an increase in the scattering. Annealing stages at 575 - 750°C do not alter the texture. Extruded and rolled tubes exhibit the same creep behavior as extruded and swaged rods of the same alloy, so that the data obtained with rod material could be applied straightway to seamless tubes. In the cross-fold and expanding tests, the ZrNb3Sn1 alloy answers the standards required from zircaloy-2. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: *Blackbody radiation, Diffusion, Emissivity, Corrections, *Radiation pyrometers, Calibration, Standards.

The fact that an artificial black body radiates energy through its aperture involves two types of corrections: a correction of the emissive power and a correction of the temperature gradient. Although the emissive power value always is less than unity, it is calculated with consideration of the multiple diffusions which the lightflux emitted by the walls suffers within the radiating chamber. The form of the black body enters then as the ratio s/S of the area of the aperture to the total area of the internal surface of the radiator. The energy radiated to the exterior through the aperture must be transmitted by conductivity through the thickness of the wall of the black body. This is the reason for the existence of a temperature gradient between the external and the internal faces of the chamber. The value of this gradient is calculated for the region of the chamber which radiates directly toward the exterior, and for the region in which no direct loss by radiation is produced. (Author)

DESCRIPTORS: Superhigh frequency, *Electric discharges, Air, Pulse generators, Pressure, Standing-wave ratios, Luminescence, *Radiofrequency pulses.

A procedure was developed for comprehensive investigation of the formation of super-high frequency pulse discharges by recording the variation of the standing-wave ratio, the local luminous output and the dimensions of the discharge. The three experimental procedures yield consistent results. The existence of three stages in the development of a self-sustaining super-high frequency discharge in air at pressures from 1 to 40 mm Hg was established. Through experiments with pulse packets, the build-up to the steady self-sustaining discharge state may extend over several pulses, the number depending on the pressure, overvoltage and pulse repetition rate. The paper investigates the effect on the waveform of a passing step voltage of an inhomogeneous place in a homogeneous line where the characteristic impedance deviates for a certain length from that of the following line section. The reflected pulse components are accounted for a path-time diagram and conclusions are made as to the form of the sending-end voltage. It is found that the step-wise rise is shaped into a rise of finite time which can be well approximated by an exponential function. For a model example where the characteristic impedance changes in the way of a squared-cosine function for a length of 1.2 m by the factor 15, good agreement between measurement and analysis can be shown. For the practical examples of a curved strip line, a dielectric support, and a 90-degree elbow the time constant is determined; it is found that it is about one order of magnitude below the rise times attainable today. DESCRIPTORS: *Single crystals, Crystals, *Crystal holders, Metallic crystals.

The apparatus uses magnetic coupling combined with a new drive system for the crystal holder. Due to the special shape of the pole pieces and the two hollow cylinders of Hiperco (Curie point 970°C) sealed in the seed holder, the latter is always attracted to the same pole piece. If the magnet rotates around the axis of the ampoule, the seed holder on its two roller tracks rolls down the inside of the ampoule in such a manner that all points of its axis describe circles and all its remaining points hypocycloids. If the magnet is lifted, the points of contact of the roller tracks with the ampoule walls pass along these two spiral lines. Since the growth rate of the crystals and, consequently, the axial velocity of the magnet are low (~1 cm/h), this movement produces primarily rolling friction between seed holder and ampoule wall and the uniform movement of the seed necessary for crystal pulling is obtained. At the same time the rotating seed brings about a thorough stirring of the melt.

DESCRIPTORS: *Magnetic fields, *Diffusion, *Electric currents, Semiconductors, Germanium, Electrons, Hall effect, Numerical analysis.

The effect of a magnetic field on the diffusion of injected current carriers is examined in a linear approximation in terms of the concentration. Analytic expressions are obtained for quantities characterizing the diffusion of current carriers in the case in question for weak and strong fields and for an exponential dependence of the mean free path on the velocity. In the case of the mean free path no dependent on the velocity, graphs are given of these quantities as functions of the magnetic field, including also the region of medium fields. For specific cases equations are solved and the possibilities are indicated for measuring quantities characterizing the diffusion of carriers in the presence of a magnetic field and of determining from them the ratio of the Hall and drift mobilities of the minority carriers, the ratio of the concentration and mobilities of light and heavy holes, the diffusion coefficient of the carriers, and the concentration of electrons and holes in a semiconductor of combined conductivity. Residual current in the region of intrinsic conduction of aluminum oxide is calculated. The method of calculation may be extended to other dielectrics. A measuring method was developed which makes it possible for us to investigate rather simply the drop of a direct current in dielectrics at high temperature. Experimental data and a comparison with the theory indicate that the current drop in aluminum oxide is associated with thermal ionic polarization and the creation of depletion layers. The initial natural conductivity of aluminum oxide is apparently formed mainly by aluminum ions, the residual current in the presence of small voltages has an ionic component, and at higher voltages it is mainly formed by electrons. A phase diagram for InSb in the pressure range of 1-28,000 kg/cm^2 was constructed. Demonstrably the melting temperature of InSb decreases with pressure to a triple point whose coordinates are 348° and 18,300 kg/cm^2. Above this, InSb crystallizes in a different form (β - InSb). The melting temperature of the new form β - InSb increases with increasing pressure. Several kinetic characteristics of the polymorphic transformation of InSb were investigated. This transformation occured with considerable hysteresis and was accompanied by a resistance change of more than three orders of magnitude. The transformation of InSb is crystallographically irreversible; when it occurs, the monocrystalline specimen disintegrates into small fragments. The temperature and pressure dependence of the transformation speed of InSb were also investigated during these experiments. (Author)

The relative change of electrical and thermal resistance in transversal magnetic fields up to 12 kOe is measured as a function of field direction and field strength at -183° and -195°C. The Kohler relationship is tested and lattice and electronic thermal conductivity are calculated. Differential thermoelectric power of Sb/constantan and $Sb_{\perp}$ / $Sb_{\parallel}$ between -194° and +25°C was measured in the absence and presence of fields, and its field dependence at low temperatures was studied.
